FOOD HALLS: CAN'T STOP, WON'T STOP

It's the trend that never ends—sprawling food courts continue to surface around the world, tapping local talent and updating the lunchtime stakes. Here are just a few of our favorites to try. Let the grazing begin.

THE DENVER CENTRAL MARKET

Justin Brunson's Old Major is among the 11 purveyors at this just-opened market. denvercentralmarket.com.

HEIGHTS MARKET This dining hub in Tampa Bay, Florida, will offer 22,000 square feet that includes coffee bars, wine shops and an Ichteoro Ramen. 1910 N. Ola Ave.

DETROIT SHIPPING CO. Leave it to Motor City to make magic out of old shipping containers. Inside this salvaged space: five restaurants, two bars, a pop-up gallery and more. detroitshipyard.com.

TRADE At this indoor-outdoor market in Irvine, California, Slapfish chef Andrew Gruel is dishing fried and grilled chicken sandwiches. 222trade.com.

LEGACY HALL Tiny restaurants from celebrated chefs like FT33's Matt McCallister are in the works for this Plano, Texas, food center, opening at the end of the year. legacyfoodhall.com.

MERCADO MUNICIPAL DE PINHEIROS

Chef Alex Atala took over this former market in São Paulo last spring and reinvented it with dozens of local purveyors, a ceviche counter and a casual café. R. Pedro Cristi, 89.

LUMINE NEWOMAN This outpost of the luxury Japanese department store in Tokyo has a 21-hour food hall, complete with Neapolitan pizza and California's Verve coffee. newoman.jp.

SPICE IT UP

Get ready to obsess over this piri piri chicken and fries (p. 93).
