It shouldn't take a special occasion to prompt a weekend getaway, but for those who are big planners—or the opposite, terrible at planning—this can seem more overwhelming than it needs to be. This is vacation, after all, and there's plenty of fantastic cities across the country that are perfect for a weekend trip. But if you're sticking to your state—or one around it—you can have a romantic getaway that's just a road trip away. And we're not talking big cities, either. These are the smaller towns, quiet lakes, mountains, and beaches that will actually make your weekend feel like a true getaway. Leave the planning to us—we've got you covered in all 50 states.

Rhode Island

Newport

Newport is so old money, and it absolutely knows it. The town is home to so many Gilded Age manors, there's a separate "mansions" page on its tourism site. Once you've gawked at enough chandeliers (and tour guides in absurd, old-timey hats), book a massage at one of the town's several spas, or head to the Newport Vineyards' tasting room. -KH
