THE TRAVEL BOOM AMONG AMERICANS WILL CONTINUE THROUGH SHOULDER SEASON

It's been fairly well documented by this point via news reports, industry studies, and even social media, that Americans are traveling in droves this summer.

And it seems that enthusiasm among Americans for getting out and exploring the world is likely to continue for months to come. A new report from the travel management app Tripit shows that fresh off the July 4th holiday rush, travel volume will continue to increase in August and shows no signs of letting up in September either.

International flight volume in August will be 78 percent above 2022 levels for the same month, while domestic flights are expected to increase by about 75 percent, according to Tripit data. The busiest days for travel in August meanwhile, will be at the start of the month—namely, August 3 and 4. This reality holds true no matter whether you're boarding flights, picking up a rental car, or checking into hotels and vacation rentals.
