Vietgone is not your typical how-Mom-met-Dad story. Not unless they hit it off at a refugee camp in Arkansas. But that’s the story of playwright Qui Nguyen’s parents, who fell in love against all odds.

Fleeing war-torn Vietnam, Tong and Quang navigate the unfamiliar landscape of 1970s America. As they learn more about the culture of this new land, they ponder what “home” really means. Is home a place, a person, a feeling?

Bending genres and breaking rules, Nguyen’s cheeky retelling of his own family story skips through time and BEGINS FEBRUARY 21 A.C.T.’S STRAND THEATER bounces between borders, cracking jokes along the way. Director Jaime Castañeda, who’s known Nguyen for years, calls this play “uniquely Qui—he takes what seems like a traditional immigrant story and turns it into this wild, epic road-trip fantasia with fights and music and dancing and sex.”

Set to an original soundtrack that mixes contemporary hip-hop sounds with '70s funk and disco, Vietgone is a toe-tapping adventure that explores the heartbreak of war along with the funny side of love. Throughout, Nguyen’s storytelling seamlessly shifts from romantic comedy to heart-rending drama.

Winner of the 2016 Harold and Mimi Steinberg/American Theatre Critics Association New Play Award, Vietgone was an off-Broadway hit at Manhattan Theatre Club and sold out shows at 2016’s Oregon Shakespeare Festival. This all-new production—complete with kick-ass ninja fights and an original rap-inspired score—will burst into The Strand this February.

American Conservatory Theater, San Francisco’s Tony Award-winning nonprofit theater, nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training, and ongoing engagement with our community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Executive Director Peter Pastreich, we embrace our responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent our rich theatrical traditions and literatures, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. Founded by William Ball, a pioneer of the regional theater movement, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season in 1967. We have since performed more than 350 productions to a combined audience of more than seven million people. Every year we reach more than 250,000 people through our productions and programs.

Rising from the wreckage of the earthquake and fire of 1906 and hailed as the “perfect playhouse,” the beautiful, historic Geary Theater has been our home since the beginning. When the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake ripped the roof apart, San Franciscans rallied together to raise a record-breaking $30 million to rebuild the theater. The Geary reopened in 1996 with a production of The Tempest directed by Perloff, who took over in 1992 after the retirement of A.C.T.’s second artistic director, gentleman artist Ed Hastings.

Perloff’s 25-season tenure has been marked by groundbreaking productions of classical works and new translations creatively colliding with exceptional contemporary theater; cross-disciplinary performances and international collaborations; and theater made by, for, and about the Bay Area. Her fierce commitment to audience engagement ushered in a new era of InterACT events and dramaturgical publications, inviting everyone to explore what goes on behind the scenes.

A.C.T.’s 50-year-old Conservatory, led by Melissa Smith, is at the center of our work. Our three-year, fully accredited Master of Fine Arts Program is at the forefront of America’s actor training programs. Meanwhile, our intensive Summer Training Congress attracts students from around the world, and the San Francisco Semester offers a unique study-abroad opportunity for undergraduates. Other programs include Studio A.C.T.—our expansive course of theater study for adults—and the Professional Development Training Program, which offers actor training for companies seeking to elevate their employees’ business performance skills. Our alumni often grace our mainstage and perform around the Bay Area, as well as on stages and screens across the country.

A.C.T. also brings the benefits of theater-based arts education to more than 16,000 Bay Area students and educators each year. Director of Education & Community Programs Elizabeth Brodersen oversees the world-famous Young Conservatory (for students ages 8 to 19) and our ACTsmart education programs, including the Student Matinee (SMAT) program that has brought hundreds of thousands of young people to A.C.T. performances since 1968. We also provide touring Will on Wheels Shakespeare productions, teaching-artist residencies, in-school workshops, and study materials to Bay Area schools and community-based organizations.

With our increased presence in the Central Market neighborhood marked by the renovation of The Strand Theater and the opening of The Costume Shop Theater, A.C.T. plays a leadership role in securing the future of theater for San Francisco and the nation.

Dear Friends,

Happy New Year and welcome to The Birthday Party!

Samuel Beckett famously said about James Joyce, “His work is not about the thing, it is the thing itself.” I have always felt that the same applies to the extraordinary work of Harold Pinter. Although much has been written about Pinter’s existential or absurdist tendencies, the truth is that a Pinter play is pure experience. He encloses a world, puts people inside that world, and watches them fight to survive. In Pinter’s landscape, you are predator or prey. And watching how those roles shift in an instant can make for thrilling and surprisingly hilarious drama. Pinter asks us to examine why we treat each other the way we do. What is power? How does sexuality play into it? Why is innocence so dangerous and seductive? What are we guilty of? Later in life, when talking about The Birthday Party, Pinter said that although his plays became more obviously political over time, he always felt The Birthday Party told the story of one individual fighting against the co-option of the state, or the group, or the mob. When Petey yells out, “Stan, don’t let them tell you what to do!” Pinter was speaking from experience. He spent his whole life not doing what people told him to do.

I first worked with Pinter in 1989 in New York. I was running Classic Stage Company, a small off-Broadway theater, where we were producing the American premiere of Pinter’s Mountain Language (a one-act play about political prisoners forbidden to speak their own language) in a double bill with The Birthday Party. Pinter came to New York to rehearse with us. You can’t imagine how surreal that was for me: I was a twentiesomething director running a fairly indigent downtown theater, and was offered the opportunity to collaborate with perhaps the greatest living playwright in the English-speaking world. Despite his famously cantankerous reputation, Pinter was a joy to work with. He relished the process (he loved actors, being one himself), and when solicited, gave succinct and brilliant notes. He took the characters at their word, interrogated them just as we did, defended their territory and laughed at their jokes, understood their vulnerability and shuddered at their cruelty. Every moment was about action, every duet was a stand-off and a dance.

As I got to know Pinter, it became clear what a Jewish writer he was. Growing up in the East End of London as the son of a Jewish tailor, Pinter was evacuated during World War II and experienced the force of anti-Semitic violence as a young man. His humor is drawn from Jewish music hall traditions, and his writing exhibits a palpable sense of being an outsider in the class-oriented world of postwar Britain. One particular hint of his Jewish background is the obsession with names and naming in his plays, in particular with the way Jews often change their names to protect themselves. Pinter himself acted under the stage name “David Baron” for many years, and when I asked him why he finally gave that up, he replied, “They always find out in the end.” In The Birthday Party, Goldberg’s name is an object of great confusion (and some terror) for McCann, who doesn’t seem to understand what Goldberg is hiding.

In addition, Pinter was one of the most erudite of writers, and completely self-taught. Like his friend Tom Stoppard, Pinter left school at 17 and never went to university, but his deep knowledge of literature and history, and his profound love of Shakespeare, come through in all his writing. Having just directed Hamlet, I find much of the Bard in The Birthday Party.

Since that encounter in New York, I have directed nearly all of Pinter’s plays, but I have not returned to The Birthday Party until now. It felt like a fitting choice for my final season as A.C.T.’s artistic director, in part because it is material that is more resonant than ever in this moment of terror and bullying, in part because in spite of its dark themes, it still makes me laugh out loud, and in part because the play offered me the opportunity to bring back to The Geary so many favorite artists, including Marco Barricelli, Firdous Bamji, Dan Hiatt, Julie Adamo, and Scott Wentworth, as well as designers Nina Ball, Darron L West, and Candice Donnelly, and to introduce one of America’s greatest comediennes, Judith Ivey, to the Geary stage. Working on the play, it is clear what a profound influence it has had on so many subsequent writers, from Martin McDonagh to Sam Shepard to Annie Baker. It has been a great joy to go back to the source.

This production of The Birthday Party is dedicated to my husband, Anthony Giles, in celebration of all the many nights we have sat on our couch reading Pinter aloud to each other and feeling, in Lenny’s words from The Homecoming, “jubilant.”

Thank you for joining us, and enjoy!

LIKE STAGING A BOXING MATCH

AN INTERVIEW WITH DIRECTOR CAREY PERLOFF

BY SIMON HODGSON
In 1987, Carey Perloff wrote to Harold Pinter to gain the rights to The Birthday Party for Classic Stage Company. The odds were against the 28-year-old director. Pinter was unhappy about American productions of his plays that were overly psychological. “Americans tend to do dramaturgy that’s confessional,” says Perloff. “If you tell the truth, you absolve yourself. But the British don’t tend to tell people what they think. For them, language is a smokescreen.” Perloff’s persistence earned her not only the rights to the play, but the beginning of a collaboration with Pinter that would span 20 years. As Perloff returns to The Birthday Party for the first time since the ’80s, she spoke about the play and her long partnership with Pinter and his work.

Why do you keep coming back to Pinter?

There’s nothing better. [Laughs] He’s such a touchstone for me. I find his work absolutely hilarious. Meg asks Goldberg, “Do you like my dress, Mr. Goldberg?” and he says, “It’s out on its own.” Who writes like that? It’s so crazy and yet so real and brilliant. I love the mystery of it, the muscle. Every line is active. You’re either predator or prey. It’s like staging a boxing match.

What did you learn from working with Pinter?

Having him in the room was incalculable. Pinter never explained something in terms of what it meant. I asked him why Meg always asks Petey to read her the newspaper; what does it tell us about their marriage? He said, “I believe she’s forgotten how to read.” That is something an actor can play. He always said “I believe” because as a writer, he trusted his characters to teach him what the play was about.

You first directed The Birthday Party in 1988. What’s different about this play for an audience in 2018?

We’ve gone through a lot more terror. We’ve been through 9/11. Remember that Pinter grew up during World War II. The fact that he was a Jewish kid living in London during the Blitz at a time of enormous anti-Semitism is highly relevant to Pinter’s sense of the world. The Birthday Party is about the individual against the state—the visceral experience of being hunted—but it’s also about coercive religious and political institutions.

What are the challenges facing you and scenic designer Nina Ball?

The set should feel inescapable, claustrophobic, and not too capacious. It’s a challenge in the enormous Geary Theater to make something enclosed. Nina’s an amazing designer. Her set looks ordinary, but it’s also just a little skewed and weird. It was Nina’s thought to build the sand world around this seaside boardinghouse.

How does the production design square with the dramaturgy?

What I said to the designers is that Pinter had an incredibly complex theatrical imagination. He started a play with two people sitting in a room, and he would listen and wait to see what they said. He had an incredible sense of action, menace, sexuality, and surprise. Nobody ever says anything that isn’t targeted. When Goldberg threatens Stanley and says sit down and Stanley won’t sit down and then Goldberg stands up, that is a change of landscape as enormous as a bomb going off. The stage directions and the physical relationship of characters to each other are potent.

Why is Pinter one of the great playwrights?

He brought a liveness and muscle to drama that had been very conversational. If you look at who had come before him—Noël Coward, J. B. Priestley, Terence Rattigan—they’re quite different. Pinter’s plays are like athletic events. All about competition. The drama is sexual and active. It’s about moment-to-moment experiences of people caught in a room, trying to either protect or defend themselves.

Why do you keep coming back to Pinter?

For any Pinter character, the past is fraught terrain, a country of infinite mystery. Everyone has done things they’re ashamed of. As he said about Old Times, you don’t have nostalgia until you turn 40 and then all you think about is your past. That’s why he usually writes older characters. In The Birthday Party, several characters refer to incidents or people in their pasts. Are they telling the truth? Ultimately, it doesn’t matter. It only matters how the past can influence the moment now.

As you prepare for opening night at The Geary, what has been the most enjoyable part of the process?

Being in the rehearsal room. It’s absolutely alive. You can’t analyze it, you have to do it. You have to be incredibly bold. It’s funny and rigorous and uncompromising and delicious. It’s pure theater. Everything was theatrical for Pinter.

Set model, by scenic designer Nina Ball, for A.C.T.’s 2018 production of The Birthday Party.
In Harold Pinter’s The Birthday Party, Goldberg and McCann arrive at an English seaside boardinghouse in search of a third man—Stanley. Who they are, whom they represent, and why they’ve come for Stanley are mysteries. Into this expositional vacuum rush uncertainty and unease. In Act Two, they subject him to a fierce interrogation, including a series of bewildering questions: “What about the Albigensenist heresy?” “Who watered the wicket in Melbourne? “What about the blessed Oliver Plunkett?” What’s the meaning of this? Is it code? The answer lies in how Pinter’s characters get and deploy power. It lies, too, in the reasons why power mattered so much to him in the first place.

Pinter was very young when he learned how dangerous the world can be when those with power attempt to bend the powerless to their will. He was born in London in 1930 to a Jewish family. In 1939, at the beginning of World War II, he and 1.5 million other British city children were evacuated to the countryside, where they would be safe from German bombers. On the coast of Cornwall, he felt isolated from the surroundings and people he knew. His disoriented seaside life lasted a year, after which he returned to London in time for the worst of the bombing.
Before and even after the war he saw members of the British Union of Fascists parade through the heavily Jewish East End. The brigades of black-shirted men were a reminder that the nighttime knock on the door could come to England as well as mainland Europe. For Pinter and his friends, this display of power was a none-too-subtle threat.

The blackshirts were an ugly minority in Britain, but Pinter ran up against the full power of the state when in 1948 he refused to register for national service (the British equivalent of the draft in America). The war was just over; revelations about the Nazi death camps were still shocking; the Soviets had seized Eastern Europe, and the Allies, led by the United States, were airdropping supplies to keep West Berlin from starvation. Obligated by world affairs, patriotism, and the pressure to conform, Pinter’s closest friends obeyed the law and signed up. But Pinter refused to serve. He spent a night in jail and only his father’s willingness to pay the fines—as well as a change in the way that conscientious objectors were treated—kept him from a prison sentence. Before he was 20, the ways in which the powerful pressured the powerless had been indelibly implanted in his consciousness and imagination.

Power isn’t always about physical violence: the knock at the door, the punch to the solar plexus. In Pinter’s plays, power is more often psychological, and words are the weapons. As theater critic Michael Billington wrote in his biography Harold Pinter, “Any conversation between two people conceals a tactical battle for advantage.”

In daily life we use words to refer to the things and concepts that they represent. But Pinter often uses words not to relay or discover information but to define a relationship in terms of power. A character makes a statement or asks a question and, regardless of the sentence’s literal meaning, the listener understands that he’s being asked to accept lower status in a struggle for power. When Goldberg asks Stanley, “Who watered the wicket in Melbourne?” (a reference to a notorious 1955 cricket match), he’s not asking for information. He means to dominate, confuse, and terrorize Stanley into submission.

“Power” in and of itself isn’t a theme. “Power must be resisted” is. A character asked to surrender power may choose to resist instead. Stanley resists with words of his own, and when they fail him, one can argue that he still tries to exert his will through sounds. He resists Goldberg and McCann all the way from the interrogation until the moment when Petey, Meg’s easygoing husband, urges, “Stan, don’t let them tell you what to do!”—a line that Pinter said was possibly the most important he ever wrote.

The one thing a Pinter character must never do when confronting power is admit fear or confess vulnerability. The battle must be played out to the end. No one in a Pinter play succumbs to power until the curtain comes down, and even then, there may be no clear-cut victor. Goldberg and McCann wield power inside the boardinghouse, but may well have none outside it. Neither man exits the play unscathed, and their fate is as unknown as Stanley’s. They too may discover the need to resist.

COUTURE KOREA

Couture Korea explores the impact of traditional fashion on contemporary trends, showing how new generations are reinterpreting time-honored Korean designs and how Korea is influencing global haute couture.
Exploration and Collaboration. Those are the two words new Young Conservatory Director Jill MacLean uses to describe this year’s YC season. “It’s all about experiencing theater not just as an assignment—‘Come in and pick up your script’—but as a collaboration,” says MacLean. “That’s how a play starts: artists sit down in a room and ask what do we want to say. That’s at the heart of why we do theater.”

This exploration of every facet of the theater world is happening in the YC in many different ways. One is expanding current acting classes to include other aspects of theater-making—playwriting, dance, stage combat, design, stage management, and directing. YC students will also have the opportunity to attend and participate in staged readings and collaborative workshops. The students in one of this fall’s acting classes traveled with their teacher, Black Butterflies director Lauren Spencer, to Brava Theater Center in the Mission to watch her in action in a staged reading of a new play. “I want these young theater artists to see firsthand how the acting tools they are learning translate to the real theater world,” says MacLean. “Sometimes the most impactful lessons for developing actors are learned outside of the classroom.”

Another area of discovery and collaboration is the growing relationship between A.C.T.’s mainstage shows and those produced in the YC. When Hamlet was on the Geary stage in September, the YC was preparing to perform Tom Stoppard’s Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead, a play that centers on two of Hamlet’s supporting characters. The cast of Hamlet, including Tony Award-nominated actor John Douglas Thompson, even stopped by to chat with these budding actors about their process and their thoughts on Shakespeare’s iconic characters.

This relationship with A.C.T.’s mainstage productions continues this winter, as YC actors study playwright Harold Pinter in their classes and prepare to tackle Vietgone playwright Qui Nguyen’s play Begets: Fall of a High School Ronin. Begets follows Emi Edwards, a high schooler who overcomes bullying using her kung fu prowess, only to discover that violence engenders violence. “It’s Mean Girls meets samurais meets the teenage trifecta of adolescence, popularity, and power. It’s a great opportunity to explore some movement-based work,” says A.C.T. Associate Producer Ken Savage. YC actors will also meet the playwright and share their experiences of working on Nguyen’s plays with the cast of Vietgone.
Begets also provides an opportunity for collaboration with another of A.C.T.’s actor training programs: the Master of Fine Arts Program. A handful of roles in Nguyen’s play will be played by M.F.A. Program actors, building upon the relationships that these developing theater-makers fostered during this year’s Christmas Carol. “With the M.F.A. Program actors literally rehearsing right next door, there are so many opportunities for these actors-in-training to learn and discover together,” says MacLean.

This relationship between the YC and the M.F.A. Program will carry through into the summer, as M.F.A. Citizen Artists teach in the YC’s summer classes as well as in the Summer Training Congress and Education & Community Programs initiatives throughout the Bay Area.

Later this season, the YC will continue its mission to commission new work written for young actors through the Collaborative Youth Arts Project (CYAP). Working alongside other theater-makers from Destiny Arts Center in Oakland and A.C.T.’s Education & Community Programs, the YC actors will participate in the new play development process with The River Bride playwright Marisela Treviño Orta as she crafts a work about them and for them.

“This year in the YC is all about these young developing actors connecting with what is going on outside the classroom,” says MacLean, “creating the stories they want to tell, and exploring theater-making, what it means to them, and their place in it.”

A.C.T. AND MACY’S SUPPORT EDUCATION PROGRAMS WITH DICKENS EVENT

BY A.C.T. PUBLICATIONS STAFF

On a sunny day in December, Union Square rang out with the sounds of A.C.T. as young actors from our Master of Fine Arts Program and Young Conservatory performed at our inaugural family-friendly fundraiser, A Dickens of a Holiday. The brand-new event, a partnership between Macy’s and A.C.T. celebrating A Christmas Carol, raised $70,000 for our Education & Community Programs, which reach more than 16,000 young people every year. Families from across the Bay Area enjoyed holiday treats, costumed carolers, arts and crafts, and face-painting, before strolling two blocks to The Geary Theater for a matinee performance of the seasonal favorite. A big thank you to event chair Adriana López Vermut and her terrific event committee, to Macy’s Union Square, to the performers who wowed the crowd, and to everyone who supported this hugely entertaining holiday event.

CLOCKWISE FROM TOP

Young actors from A.C.T.’s Master of Fine Arts Program and Young Conservatory regale the crowd at Macy’s Union Square; families get creative in arts and crafts; M.F.A. Program actors Beatriz Miranda and Peter Fanone join fellow Carol cast members Dylan Elizabeth Hammond and David Graham Jones for a photo opportunity with guests at A Dickens of a Holiday.
As December turns to January, our minds fill with goals and plans for the future. For some, that means planning their next outing to the theater. For others, it means planning for the rest of their lives—and beyond.

“If you are passionate about theater and passionate about A.C.T., why not give a little for the future?” says A.C.T. Trustee and Prospero Society Chair Jo S. Hurley. “Everyone who loves theater and is interested in the future of theater in the Bay Area should join Prospero.”

Named after the magician in Shakespeare’s The Tempest, A.C.T.’s Prospero Society was created especially for those theater lovers who have included A.C.T. in their estate plans. Their generosity helps support all facets of A.C.T., including the Master of Fine Arts and Education & Community programs, new play development, and vital infrastructure upgrades, such as repaving the sidewalk outside The Geary Theater.

For their contribution, Prospero members become part of A.C.T.’s family. They are invited to attend meet-and-greets with actors and designers, staged readings, sneak peeks of the upcoming season, behind-the-scenes tours, and elegant meals on the Geary stage. They can also relax in our VIP Lounge before the show and during intermission.

“It’s about feeling part of something bigger,” says Prospero Society committee member Kay Auciello. “It’s being able to see how A.C.T. grows, how its actors and Conservatory students develop, appreciating all that’s involved in creating great theater, and knowing that your support will continue to contribute to these artistic endeavors after you’re gone.”

“Having legacy donors is more important now than we ever imagined,” says Prospero Society committee member Barbara Bessey. “Arts organizations need all the help they can get. Joining Prospero is about letting A.C.T. know that you think enough of them that you want them to succeed in the future.”

For more information on membership benefits and how to plan your legacy gift to A.C.T., visit act-sf.org/prospero or contact A.C.T. Deputy Director of Development Tiffany Redmon at 415.439.2482 or tredmon@act-sf.org.

A.C.T. Profiles

Carey Perloff (Artistic Director) is celebrating her 25th season as artistic director of A.C.T., where she has overseen a huge growth in the quality and scope of A.C.T.’s work, helped to rebuild the earthquake-damaged Geary Theater and the new Strand Theater in Central Market, and has forged collaborations between A.C.T. and theaters across the United States and Canada. Known for innovative productions of classics and championing new writing and new forms of theater, Perloff has directed classical plays from around the world, 10 plays by Tom Stoppard (including the American premieres of The Invention of Love and Indian Ink, also at Roundabout Theatre Company, and two productions of Arcadia), and many productions by favorite contemporary writers such as Samuel Beckett, Harold Pinter, José Rivera, and Philip Kan Gotanda. Favorite productions include Hecuba, Mary Stuart, ’Tis Pity She’s a Whore, The Tosca Café, The Voysey Inheritance, Scorched, and Underneath the Lintel.

Perloff is also an award-winning playwright. Her recent play Kinship premiered at the Théâtre de Paris in 2014; Higher won the 2011 Blanche and Irving Laurie Foundation Theatre Visions Fund Award; and Luminescence Dating premiered in New York at The Ensemble Studio Theatre. Perloff’s book, Beautiful Chaos: A Life in the Theater (City Lights Press), was selected as San Francisco Public Library’s One City One Book read for 2016.

Before joining A.C.T., Perloff was artistic director of Classic Stage Company in New York, where she directed the premiere of Ezra Pound’s Elektra, the American premiere of Pinter’s Mountain Language, and many classic works. Named a Chevalier de l’Ordre des Arts et des Lettres by the French government, Perloff received a BA Phi Beta Kappa in classics and comparative literature from Stanford University and was a Fulbright Fellow at Oxford.

Peter Pastreich (Executive Director) joined A.C.T. after a 50-year career in arts management. He spent 21 years as executive director of the San Francisco Symphony, a period that included the tenures of music directors Edo De Waart, Herbert Blomstedt, and Michael Tilson Thomas, and during which the orchestra increased its endowment from $12 million to $120 million. Pastreich was the chief administrator responsible for the construction of Davies Symphony Hall in San Francisco, and for its acoustical renovation.

Before coming to San Francisco, he spent 12 years as executive director of the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra and six years as managing director of the Mississippi River Festival. In addition, Pastreich has done management consulting for the Berlin Philharmonic, Southbank Centre in London, Detroit Symphony, Louisville Orchestra, Milwaukee Symphony, Philadelphia Orchestra, and Sydney Symphony Orchestra in Australia. He has also served as mediator in orchestra and opera union negotiations in Detroit, Louisville, Milwaukee, Phoenix, Sacramento, Seattle, and San Antonio.

Born in Brooklyn, New York, in 1938, Pastreich received a BA in English literature from Yale University in 1959. In 1999, he was made a Chevalier de l’Ordre des Arts et des Lettres by the French government and was named an honorary member of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees by Local 16 of the Stagehands Union.

Melissa Smith (Conservatory Director, Head of Acting) has served as Conservatory director and head of acting in the Master of Fine Arts Program at A.C.T. since 1995. During that time, she has overseen the expansion of the M.F.A. Program from a two- to a three-year course of study and the further integration of the M.F.A. Program faculty and student body with A.C.T.’s artistic wing, while also teaching and directing in the M.F.A. Program, Summer Training Congress, and Studio A.C.T. She also successfully launched the San Francisco Semester, a semester-long intensive designed to deepen students’ well of acting experience, broaden their knowledge of dramatic literature, and sharpen their technical skills—all while immersing them in the multifaceted cultural landscape of the Bay Area. Prior to assuming leadership of the Conservatory, Smith was the director of the Program in Theater and Dance at Princeton University, where she also taught introductory, intermediate, and advanced acting. She has taught acting classes to students of all ages in various colleges, high schools, and studios around the continental United States, at the Mid-Pacific Institute in Hawaii, New York University’s La Pietra campus in Florence, and the Teatro di Pisa in San Miniato, Italy. She is featured in Acting Teachers of America: A Vital Tradition. Also a professional actor, she has performed regionally at the Hangar Theatre, A.C.T., the California Shakespeare Festival, Berkeley Repertory Theatre; in New York at Primary Stages and Soho Rep.; and in England at the Barbican Centre in London and Birmingham Repertory Theatre. Smith holds a BA from Yale College and an MFA in acting from Yale School of Drama.

After enthralling audiences with Aubergine, Julia Cho returns to Berkeley Rep with a searing and touching play. Hiding in the back of the classroom, Dennis’ sullen presence has his fellow students and professors on edge. But during an office visit, his writing instructor seeks to break through Dennis’ silence and earn his trust—with shocking results. A deeply personal story of empathy and redemption, Office Hour explores otherness and paranoia while revealing our essential human need for connection.
