The feeling of my family, the caring of my community.
American Conservatory Theater, San Francisco’s Tony Award-winning nonprofit theater, nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training, and ongoing engagement with our community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff, we embrace our responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent our rich theatrical traditions and literatures, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. Founded by William Ball, a pioneer of the regional theater movement, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season in 1967. We have since performed more than 350 productions to a combined audience of more than seven million people. Every year we reach more than 250,000 people through our productions and programs.

Rising from the wreckage of the earthquake and fire of 1906 and hailed as the “perfect playhouse,” the beautiful, historic Geary Theater has been our home since the beginning. When the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake ripped the roof apart, San Franciscans rallied together to raise a record-breaking $30 million to rebuild the theater. The Geary reopened in 1996 with a production of The Tempest directed by Perloff, who took over in 1992 after the retirement of A.C.T.’s second artistic director, gentleman artist Ed Hastings.

Perloff’s 24-season tenure has been marked by groundbreaking productions of classical works and new translations creatively colliding with exceptional contemporary theater; cross-disciplinary performances and international collaborations; and theater made by, for, and about the Bay Area. Her fierce disciplinary performances and international collaborations; colliding with exceptional contemporary theater; cross-productions of classical works and new translations creatively.

A.C.T.’s 50-year-old Conservatory, led by Melissa Smith, is at the center of our work. Our three-year, fully accredited Master of Fine Arts Program is at the forefront of America’s actor training programs. Meanwhile, our intensive Summer Training Congress attracts students from around the world, and the San Francisco Semester offers a unique study-abroad opportunity for undergraduates. Other programs include the world-famous Young Conservatory for students ages 8 to 19, led by 28-year veteran Craig Slaight; Studio A.C.T., our expansive course of theater study for adults; and the Professional Development Training Program, which offers actor training for companies seeking to elevate their employees’ business performance skills. Our alumni often grace our mainstage and perform around the Bay Area, as well as on stages and screens across the country.

A.C.T. also brings the benefits of theater-based arts education to more than 12,000 Bay Area students and educators each year. Central to our ACTsmart education programs, run by Director of Education & Community Programs Elizabeth Brodersen, is the longstanding Student Matinee (SMAT) program, which has brought hundreds of thousands of young people to A.C.T. performances since 1968. We also provide touring Will on Wheels Shakespeare productions, teaching-artist residencies, in-school workshops, and study materials to Bay Area schools and community-based organizations.

With our increased presence in the Central Market neighborhood marked by the renovation of The Strand Theater and the opening of The Costume Shop Theater, A.C.T. plays a leadership role in securing the future of theater for San Francisco and the nation.

“City National helps keep my financial life in tune.”

So much of my life is always shifting; a different city, a different piece of music, a different ensemble. I need people who I can count on to help keep my financial life on course so I can focus on creating and sharing the “adventures” of classical music. City National shares my passion and is instrumental in helping me bring classical music to audiences all over the world. They enjoy being a part of what I do and love. That is the essence of a successful relationship.

City National is The way up® for me.

Dear Friends,

The work of Tom Stoppard is almost synonymous with A.C.T.’s 50 years. Long before I arrived here as artistic director, his plays were beloved by Bay Area audiences, who had enjoyed Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead, Hapgood, and Travesties on the Geary stage. I met Stoppard when we produced the first American production (outside New York) of his glorious Arcadia, and that meeting was the start of one of the longest and most fruitful artistic collaborations of my career. There’s no one I have more fun working with than Tom, in part because each of his plays requires a deep dive into unfamiliar territory. I learned about chaos theory from Arcadia, the second law of thermodynamics from Hapgood, the history of Czech politics from Rock ’n’ Roll, the love poetry of A. E. Housman from The Invention of Love, the fall of the Raj from Indian Ink . . . and that’s only the beginning. Stoppard’s capacious mind manages to absorb huge chunks of intellectual and psychic history, and to create deeply felt characters and situations.

So when I learned he was working on brain science, I knew we’d be in for a fascinating ride. Stoppard has always wrestled with consciousness and the limits of materialism: in Rock ’n’ Roll, the radical grad student Lenka says to Max, “What you like about brains, Max, is that they all work in the same way. What you don’t like about minds is that they don’t. To you consciousness is subversive—because your thing is the collective mind. But politics is over. You’re looking for the revolution in the wrong place. Consciousness is where it’s at now. We have to discover our human mystery in the age of technology.”

“Discovering our human mystery in the age of technology”: a wonderful charge to take up, and a perfect summation of the story behind his newest play, The Hard Problem, in which a young psychologist struggles to reconcile her own personal feelings about the human mind with the objective “truths” of her discipline. If there’s nothing more to our brains than gray matter, how is it possible to understand love, faith, sorrow, and the imagination? Where do feelings come from, and how can they be explained in a material world? Of what use is consciousness, and how did it develop from an evolutionary point of view? If everything can be predicted according to a rational model of the universe, how do we explain the irrationality of love or desire? In science, in the financial markets, in all of human life, these questions confound. “Every now and then, the market’s behavior becomes irrational, as though it’s gone mad, or fallen in love. It doesn’t compute. It’s only computers compute,” says Amal, a young investment analyst in The Hard Problem.

The intersection of philosophy and neuroscience provides food for thought not only for the characters in The Hard Problem, but for all of us wrestling with similar quandaries in the real world. In preparing for this production, we have collaborated with the Exploratorium (whose excellent exhibit on the Prisoner’s Dilemma is a perfect complement to this play), with scientists from UC Berkeley, with financial wizards, and with specialists in altruism and egoism. Stoppard has been in residence with us for nearly the whole rehearsal process, and his insights and wisdom in the room are always a gift. We’re incredibly grateful that, as part of A.C.T.’s 50th anniversary, we are able to celebrate the ongoing work of this remarkable playwright with you.

This production also celebrates our Conservatory (two of the cast members are current M.F.A. Program actors, one is an M.F.A. Program alum, and one is a student in our Young Conservatory), which has been a central part of A.C.T.’s mission from its inception. Simultaneous with The Hard Problem, an all-M.F.A. Program version of The Taming of the Shrew is playing at The Strand in honor of William Ball’s landmark production in 1973. Shrew will be followed by Spooked at the Strand, our all-over-The-Strand Halloween extravaganza in support of scholarships for M.F.A. Program actors. A.C.T. students form the creative engine of the entire organization. Indeed, I am convinced that a central reason A.C.T. has survived and flourished for 50 years in spite of all obstacles is that it has always had one foot firmly planted in the future. “The discovery of our human mystery in the age of technology” is in the hands of the next generation of artists, administrators, and audiences who have taken up the cause of live theater and who are its future. This one’s for you.

With best wishes,

Carey Perloff

CHAOS AND RATIONALITY
AN INTERVIEW WITH TOM STOPPARD
BY SIMON HODGSON
Every single decade at A.C.T., patrons have been treated to a Tom Stoppard play. The consistency underlines not only the deep veneration for Stoppard by A.C.T.’s audiences, but also the playwright’s own affection for this theater. But if you read consistency and see repetition, think again. This is a playwright whose work defies taxonomy, leaping from philosophical paradoxes to political dissidence, social justice to evolutionary biology, murder mysteries to landscape gardening. The Hard Problem is no exception when it comes to Stoppard’s usual diversity of subject matter. Jumping from consciousness to hedge funds with the connective tissue of chaos throughout, his first new play in more than a decade will feel both brand new and intimately familiar to A.C.T. audiences. While Stoppard was preparing for this production of The Hard Problem with Artistic Director Carey Perloff, we caught up with him for a quick Q&A.

Why did you choose to set The Hard Problem in 2008?
For a long time I thought I might try and write a play just about the financial crunch and why it happened. I was reading a lot about different things, including the financial crisis, and in my usual manner I looked for a way in which disparate subjects like consciousness and finance could impinge in the same play, which rather defined the date. In the end, I saw it would just fill out one small corner of the play, but a play about consciousness and a play about the financial crunch are really two different plays in an ideal world and I still wish I could have written both of them.

Can you talk a little about the ideas of chaos and rationality, which affect both the stock market and Hilary’s intellectual exploration?
For a long time during my intelligent years, from about 1950 to 1995, the computer was considered to be a paradigm for the human brain. A lot of people still think that it is, and I found that I was resisting the idea.

It seemed to me that the fact that the market behaves irrationally from time to time was an indication that it wasn’t controllable through algorithms, and that human behavior was a dimension which couldn’t be captured by maths. So I can see where, in a strange Venn diagram, a story about consciousness would overlap with a story about somebody who was trying to win in the marketplace.

I have to tell you, by the way, that my so-called knowledge of computer science is way out of date. You know the machine which beat Garry Kasparov at chess in 1997, Deep Blue? It worked in a completely different way from AlphaGo, the computer which beat the world champion at Go in 2016. I’m still trapped in my Deep Blue period.

Are there any characters in The Hard Problem that you feel close to?
I definitely feel close to Hilary. Or she is close to me. Particularly in terms of her questioning what is supposed to be a given, and her questioning this particular given, that there’s no more to us than meets a scanner.

What’s your own take on the debate around consciousness?
The predictable answer is that the play is the answer to your question. I have a habit of writing plays in which two points of view are being argued, and it’s part of my job to try and give as good an argument as I can come up with for the side I don’t really agree with.

Consciousness is a subject you’ve been digging into since Jumpers (1972). What is it about this subject that draws you in?
It’s really that I was interested in fundamental moral premises and consciousness was a byproduct. Actually, Jumpers is rather close to The Hard Problem, only [the issues are] dealt with in terms of farce.

Is The Hard Problem your way of playing out those fundamental moral premises?
Yes. George Moore in Jumpers 45 years ago said that it’s rather important with moral rules that they can’t be changed at will like the laws of tennis. I don’t think I’ve made much progress beyond that. But I don’t think anybody’s come up with the final word.

Why is The Hard Problem a stage play?
It’s what I do. I consider writing for the stage to be my main purpose in life. I was in my teens when it struck me that to be the author of a play was a splendid thing and a star beyond my firmament. To me, the whole business of live theater is unique and irreplaceable.

What is it about A.C.T. that keeps you coming back?
It’s a deeply attractive place. A.C.T. is a theater where an audience can come back time and again and see some of the same actors in different roles. It’s the first kind of theater I was seriously exposed to when I was 20 years old. And of course, there’s Carey [Perloff, artistic director]. Carey is an enthusiast. She’s been a faithful director and a faithful friend for a long time. What I like about working with her is that she thinks theater is serious and important, which is a nice thing to hear when you’re working in it.
Tom Stoppard and A.C.T. have had a long, rewarding relationship. The first appearance of a Stoppard play at The Geary occurred during the company’s third season in 1969. Since then, A.C.T. has mounted 17 more productions of his plays (including this production of The Hard Problem); 10 have been directed by Carey Perloff. Only Shakespeare, with 21, has had more productions at A.C.T.

Stoppard’s A.C.T. debut was his first big hit, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead, in which he turns Hamlet inside out. In Shakespeare’s play, the two courtiers, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, have minor roles before they are sent by Hamlet to their mysterious offstage deaths. In Rosencrantz, they are the principal characters, bewildered by their lack of agency and forever trying to keep up with the story. Like virtually all of Stoppard’s plays, it’s a comedy about very serious things.

The production was directed by A.C.T. founder William Ball. He had done Hamlet the previous season and revived it in the fall of 1969 in a series of student matinees. His Rosencrantz reportedly marked the first time that the two plays were done in the same season with the same director and cast, who reprised their Hamlet roles in Rosencrantz. Longtime subscribers will remember Paul Shenar as Hamlet, Izetta Smith as Ophelia, Ray Reinhardt as Claudius, and Angela Paton as Gertrude. James Milton and Philip Kerr were Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, respectively. Rosencrantz also gave Ken Ruta one of his first signature roles at A.C.T., The Player. Rosencrantz was a roaring success, and the production was revived in each of the following two seasons.

As was his habit, Ball didn’t regard Stoppard’s text as something to be taken literally. He interlarded large portions of Hamlet, including the “To be or not to be” soliloquy and the Hamlet and Ophelia scene; he cut and rearranged Rosencrantz to make room. Audiences didn’t seem to mind and critics didn’t seem to notice.

By 1977, A.C.T. had staged Jumpers and Travesties, as well as Stoppard’s translation of Federico García Lorca’s The House of Bernarda Alba (which was the first A.C.T. mainstage production. to be directed by a woman, company member Joy Carlin). That year, Stoppard told the San Francisco Chronicle that he was happy to do a Q&A for the A.C.T. audience during the Jumpers run, because “I am, after all, the house playwright.”

Following productions of Night and Day (1981), The Real Thing (1987), Hapgood (1990), and a revival of Rosencrantz (1995), Stoppard’s long-term lease at A.C.T. began. That year, Carey Perloff was determined to open her fourth season as artistic director with his new play, Arcadia. When pursuing the producing rights through the usual channels (the producers of the New York production, who controlled the American rights, and Stoppard’s agent in London) failed to shake them loose, she began writing Stoppard himself, who replied, as she recalls in her book, Beautiful Chaos, “with great warmth and generosity.” After several letters, as well as repeated appeals to New York and London, Perloff received a call informing her that the rights were hers.

The production was acclaimed, and a new Stoppard era was underway. Since then, A.C.T. has produced almost all of his subsequent plays: Indian Ink (the American premiere in 1999, and again in 2015); The Invention of Love (the American premiere in 2000), and Rock ‘n’ Roll (2008), as well as revivals of Night and Day (2002), The Real Thing (2004), Travesties (2006), and Arcadia (2013).

Perloff is at the opposite end of the spectrum from Ball when it comes to regarding a playwright’s text as either central to a production or a mere jumping-off point. For her, a script is more like the US Constitution: she’s determined to get at the writer’s original intent, but allows herself to interpret and to ask for the occasional amendment. For his part, Stoppard is not a playwright who feels that his texts are inviolable. He believes that they’re not even texts, but rather events that occur at a specific moment, and so can, and should, within reason, be adjusted to fit the needs of a specific production. Stoppard enjoys being in rehearsal; Perloff loves having smart people in the room. Both are happy to take good ideas from anyone.

Their close collaborations have resulted in some significant textual revisions. In Rock ‘n’ Roll, a scene between Max and Jan, who confess that each passed information about the other to the Soviets during the Cold War, was written in language so coded that it was difficult for the actors to follow exactly what was occurring and what was not being said. Stoppard decoded it just enough to allow for understanding, but not so much that he betrayed the characters’ cautious way of broaching a painful topic.

When Indian Ink had its New York premiere in 2014, Stoppard insisted that Perloff direct. That gave them the chance to rethink the final scene, which had never satisfied either of them. Perloff recalls, “[The original ending] resolved the political storyline, but ended on a recorded quote from Emily Eden that Flora [the main character] was reading on the train, rather than ending with some resolution between her and [her probable lover] Nirad Das. The love story felt shortchanged. So when we knew we were going to revive it, we sat in Tom’s kitchen in London and figured out a way to reimagine the ending.” That production, with the new ending and other minor revisions, is what A.C.T. audiences saw in 2015.

A.C.T. has seen a great many changes in 50 years. One constant has been the ongoing presence of plays by Tom Stoppard. Is it too much to ask for more of the same for another 50?
ABOUT THE PLAY

FROM TOM STOPPARD’S DESK

BY TOM STOPPARD

THE HARD PROBLEM is what the Australian philosopher David Chalmers called the mystery of consciousness; that is, the problem of explaining the phenomenon that we have subjective First Person experiences. At this moment, I am conscious of these five sensations among many others: I can see that my coffee is in a mug decorated with red hearts; I can taste that I have sweetened it; I can smell woodsmoke; I can hear voices outside in the garden; and I can touch my dog.

These five sensations I owe to “the five senses” which are associated with parts of the body. But there is more. From my coffee mug alone I also have the concepts of decoration, red, and heart-shaped. Simultaneously, I have the concept of time (I have a deadline) and of self-reproach (I’ve missed it). And another thing: I have no dog! I can imagine petting a dog.

In a 2014 TED talk, Chalmers observed, “I want a scientific theory of consciousness that works. We’ve got this wonderful great chain of explanation where physics explains chemistry, chemistry explains biology, biology explains parts of psychology. But consciousness doesn’t seem to fit into this picture. Faced with an anomaly like this, radical ideas may be needed.”

Excerpt from a program article written by Tom Stoppard for the National Theatre’s production of The Hard Problem in 2015.

UNPACKING THE IDEAS OF THE HARD PROBLEM

BY SHANNON STOCKWELL

ALTRUISM is the concept of acting in the interest of others. The existence of altruism is a subject of much debate within the fields of psychology, philosophy, evolutionary biology, and economics. Is it better to be altruistic, as opposed to egoistic (acting in one’s own self-interest)? Are organisms even capable of being altruistic, or do we always act egoistically whether we like it or not? Some scientists, especially in the fields of evolutionary biology and economics, argue that egoism is either the right way to behave or the only way we can behave. However, others point out that there are clear examples in nature of organisms acting altruistically, and that the existence of altruism cannot be ruled out altogether. Also, there are recent discoveries in the fields of evolutionary biology and economics which prove that, while behaving egoistically may benefit the individual, it may be better for society as a whole if we all behave altruistically.
THE PRISONER’S DILEMMA is an example of game theory invented by Merrill Flood and Melvin Dresher in 1950. Let’s say John and Stacy both get arrested for the same crime. The sheriff goes to John and Stacy separately and offers them a chance to evade jail time if they betray their partner, while ensuring that John and Stacy cannot communicate with each other before making their decisions. Here are the possible results of that deal:

1. If John betrays Stacy and says that she committed the crime, but Stacy stays silent, then John will get no time in prison, while Stacy will get three years.
2. If Stacy betrays John and says that he committed the crime, but John stays silent, then Stacy will get no time in prison, while John will get three years.
3. If they both betray the other, then they’ll each get two years in prison.
4. If they each stay silent, then they’ll both get one year in prison.

Mathematically, the Prisoner’s Dilemma proves that, if you are put into this situation, you’ll personally have a better outcome if you decide to betray your partner. It’s worth noting, however, that there is no option in the Prisoner’s Dilemma to confess that you did the crime yourself and leave your partner out of it—a serious oversight, in the opinion of The Hard Problem’s Hilary.

THE 2007–09 FINANCIAL CRISIS is explored in The Hard Problem because of Tom Stoppard’s intense curiosity about the chaos of systems that humans believe they can control and predict. This crisis was the world’s worst economic downturn since the 1930s. It resulted in millions of home foreclosures and job losses, wiped trillions of dollars off stock markets from London to Shanghai, and forced leaders worldwide to invest billions to support a series of failing banks. Its roots lay in a series of government decisions across Europe and North America in the 1980s and ’90s to remove various legal restrictions on the way banks moved and lent cash.

As financial institutions were allowed to lend more money than ever, they took bigger risks and spread their debts across other banks. In the United States, much of that speculative investment was poured into the real estate market, which had risen steadily for 50 years. Banks felt so confident in housing’s upward trajectory that they sold high-risk mortgages to potential homeowners with bad credit. But when the prices of those houses crashed, the stock market plummeted. Not only did the homeowners lose everything, so did the banks that had offered them mortgages. And because of the legal changes across the financial industry, it wasn’t just one bank that went bankrupt, it was a series of banks across multiple countries. The result: global economic meltdown.

A LOOK AT OUR 50TH-ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATIONS

BY SHANNON STOCKWELL

TOM STOPPARD IN CONVERSATION WITH CAREY PERLOFF
What better way to celebrate 50 years of A.C.T. than a conversation with Tom Stoppard, one of A.C.T.'s favorite playwrights? Stoppard, who was already at A.C.T. to attend rehearsals of The Hard Problem, took the Geary stage with Artistic Director Carey Perloff and neuroscientist Linda Wilbrecht on October 3 in a free event that was open to the public. The discussion covered everything from the themes of The Hard Problem to Stoppard's long and fruitful relationship with A.C.T. “There are one or two theaters around with whom I have what the English call a ‘special relationship,’” said Stoppard, “and A.C.T. is one of them.”

BIRTHDAY PARTY
A.C.T. looks forward to its official 50th birthday party on January 21, 2017, which will take place at The Geary Theater. To celebrate, we will open our doors at 9 a.m. sharp, the exact time The Geary opened back in 1967. Visitors will be invited to explore the historic theater and to enjoy complimentary snacks and beverages. Prominent San Francisco community figures will join guest artists to reflect on the history of A.C.T. and to look forward to great things yet to come. Then everyone will be invited to sing “Happy Birthday,” and yes—there will be cake!

SHARE YOUR A.C.T. STORY
As we celebrate A.C.T.’s 50th anniversary, we want to hear from the most important members of the company: you, our audience. Some of you have been with us since the beginning, and others have just joined us this year. No matter when you started coming to our theaters, we want to say thank you for being here, and we want to hear your stories about your time at A.C.T. Was there a production that you loved? A play you thought you were going to hate but ended up enjoying? Was your first experience of A.C.T. a student matinee and you've continued to come back? Did you meet someone special here? What does A.C.T. mean to you?

We’ve set up multiple ways for you to tell us your stories. You can visit act-sf.org/shareyourstory and follow the instructions there or send a letter to:

DEAR LIAR
One of the ways we’re celebrating 50 years of A.C.T. is by looking back at what we’ve created and helping it return to the stage. This was the impetus behind producing a reading of Dear Liar, by Jerome Kilty, which was staged in A.C.T.’s first season in 1967. The reading, which took place on October 2, featured two actors with whom A.C.T. has strong relationships: Annette Bening, who graduated from the A.C.T. Advanced Training Program in 1983, and Mark Harelik, who was an A.C.T. company member in the ’80s. The play, about the letters written between George Bernard Shaw and his muse, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, sparkled on the Geary stage in this invite-only free event directed by Nancy Carlin.

TEN A.M.: CLOWN CLASS. ONE P.M.: SCENE REHEARSAL.

Eight p.m.: perform alongside leading professional actors in A.C.T. mainstage productions. Such is the daily life of a third-year A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program actor.

This fall, these young artists have been treading the boards at The Geary. Actors Emily Brown and Alan Littlehales were understudies for King Charles III, and this production of The Hard Problem features Narea Kang as Bo and Julie Adamo (who also understudies Hilary) as Elaine.

“It is invaluable for our students to be in the rehearsal room with seasoned professionals,” says Director of Casting Janet Foster, who casts the M.F.A. Program actors in mainstage productions. “It gives them an up-close look at how directors and actors communicate with each other in rehearsal. They see the actors working in harmony to create the vision of the playwright and the director.”

From the moment they enter the program, students strive to step into the rehearsal room for one of the shows in A.C.T.’s subscription season. This opportunity is one of the reasons actors flock to A.C.T., the only freestanding theater in the country that offers a master of fine arts degree in acting. Littlehales says, “One of the main reasons I chose to train at A.C.T. was the opportunity to act on the Geary stage with the big dogs.”

A Christmas Carol is one such production where M.F.A. Program actors get to work with professionals. In fact, says Smith, “A role in A Christmas Carol is one of the signature features of our M.F.A. training.” Students not only work toward their coveted Actors’ Equity cards, but they also have the opportunity to be mentored by professional actors and to be mentors themselves to the Young Conservatory actors in the cast. Look out for the class of 2017 in this year’s production of A Christmas Carol, opening November 25.

The opportunity to appear in an A.C.T. mainstage production makes the M.F.A. Program a singular experience for student actors, but aside from being one of the most acclaimed actor training programs in the country, the M.F.A. Program is also a vital part of the creative climate at A.C.T. “The Conservatory is sometimes referred to as ‘the lab’ or ‘the research and development wing,’” laughs Conservatory Director Melissa Smith. Indeed, the M.F.A. Program provides a plethora of talented, inventive, and willing actors; the A.C.T. artistic staff happily invites them to participate in staged readings, which are necessary when exploring works-in-progress that are being considered for production at A.C.T.

These staged readings allow the artistic team to get a better sense of these works, but they also let students experience the process of theatrical development firsthand—an invaluable opportunity for any actor. “It’s rewarding to be a part of that process and know that you had a hand in bringing a play to life,” says Kang, who took part in a reading of Federico García Lorca’s Yerma, adapted by Melinda Lopez, at the inaugural New Strands Festival earlier this year.

These readings provide yet another opportunity for M.F.A. program actors to play and create alongside veteran actors. Earlier this year, the students got to perform a staged reading of The Winter’s Tale alongside John Douglas Thompson. Smith recalls that the Tony Award–winning actor stopped in the middle of the reading. “He turned to [M.F.A. Program actor] Julie Adamo, whose comic timing was consistently hitting the mark, and said: ‘You’re really funny! I’d better up my game.’”

Student actors are also involved in the development of shows that are slated to appear on our mainstages. A series of workshops were held to hone the script of The Unfortunates, which was performed at The Strand last spring; M.F.A. Program actors played key roles in these readings. And last year, some M.F.A. Program actors took part in movement workshops for A.C.T.’s upcoming production of A Thousand Splendid Suns. In fact, some mainstage shows—The Rainmaker (2007), Once in a Lifetime (2011), and Happy End (2005)—actually began as M.F.A. Program productions.

M.F.A. PROGRAM ACTOR ALAN LITTLEHALES

“...A.C.T. is a unique institution,” says student actor Emily Brown. “As a young artist, it has been invaluable to practice every aspect of my craft in a space like The Geary, which is so expansive, initially intimidating, and ultimately transformative. When I graduate from this program, I know I will be equipped to tackle any stage I may perform on, whether it’s a large regional theater, an outdoor amphitheater, or a Broadway house.”

CAREY PERLOFF (Artistic Director) is celebrating her 25th season as artistic director of A.C.T., where she has overseen a huge growth in the quality and scope of A.C.T.’s work, helped to rebuild the earthquake-damaged Geary Theater and the new Strand Theater in Central Market, and has forged collaborations between A.C.T. and theaters across the country and in Canada. Known for innovative productions of classics and championing new writing and new forms of theater, Perloff has directed classical plays from around the world, ten plays by Tom Stoppard (including the American premieres of The Invention of Love and Indian Ink, also at Roundabout Theatre Company, and two productions of Arcadia), and many productions by favorite contemporary writers such as Beckett, Pinter, José Rivera, and Philip Kan Gotanda. Favorite productions include Hecuba, Mary Stuart, ‘Tis Pity She’s a Whore, The Tosca Café, The Voysey Inheritance, Scorched, and Underneath the Lintel. Perloff is also an award-winning playwright. Her recent play Kinship premiered at the Théâtre de Paris in 2014; Higher won the 2011 Blanche and Irving Laurie Foundation Theatre Visions Fund Award; and Luminescence Dating premiered in New York at The Ensemble Studio Theatre. Perloff’s book, Beautiful Chaos: A Life in the Theater (City Lights Press), has been selected as San Francisco Public Library’s One City One Book read for 2016. Before joining A.C.T., Perloff was artistic director of Classic Stage Company in New York, where she directed the premiere of Ezra Pound’s Elektra, the American premiere of Pinter’s Mountain Language, and many classic works. Named a Chevalier de l’Ordre des Arts et des Lettres by the French government, Perloff received a BA Phi Beta Kappa in classics and comparative literature from Stanford University and was a Fulbright Fellow at Oxford.

PETER PASTREICH (Interim Executive Director) joins A.C.T. after a 50-year career in arts management. He spent 21 years as executive director of the San Francisco Symphony, a period that included the tenures of music directors Edo De Waart, Herbert Blomstedt, and Michael Tilson Thomas, and during which the orchestra increased its endowment from $12 million to $120 million. Pastreich was the chief administrator responsible for the construction of Davies Symphony Hall in San Francisco, and for its acoustical renovation. Before coming to San Francisco, he spent 12 years as executive director of the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra and 6 years as managing director of the Mississippi River Festival. In addition, Pastreich has done management consulting for the Berlin Philharmonic, the South Bank Centre in London, the Detroit Symphony, Louisville Orchestra, Milwaukee Symphony, Philadelphia Orchestra, and the Sydney Symphony Orchestra in Australia. He has also served as mediator in orchestra and opera union negotiations in Detroit, Louisville, Milwaukee, Phoenix, Sacramento, Seattle, and San Antonio.

Born in Brooklyn, New York, in 1938, Pastreich received a BA in English literature from Yale University in 1959. In 1999, he was made a Chevalier de l’Ordre des Arts et des Lettres by the French government and was named an honorary member of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees by Local 16 of the Stagehands Union.

MELISSA SMITH (Conservatory Director, Head of Acting) has served as Conservatory director and head of acting in the Master of Fine Arts Program at A.C.T. since 1995. Program faculty and student body with A.C.T.’s artistic wing, while also teaching and directing in the M.F.A. Program, Summer Training Congress, and Studio A.C.T. She also successfully launched the San Francisco Semester, a semester-long intensive crafted to deepen the students’ well of acting experience, broaden their knowledge of dramatic literature, and sharpen their technical skills—all the while further immersing them in the multifaceted cultural landscape of the Bay Area. Prior to assuming leadership of the Conservatory, Smith was the director of the Program in Theater and Dance at Princeton University, where she also taught introductory, intermediate, and advanced acting. She has taught acting classes to students of all ages in various colleges, high schools, and studios around the continental United States, at the Mid-Pacific Institute in Hawaii, New York University’s La Pietra campus in Florence, and the Teatro di Pisa in San Miniato, Italy. She is featured in Acting Teachers of America: A Vital Tradition. Also a professional actor, she has performed regionally at the Hangar Theatre, A.C.T., the California Shakespeare Festival, Berkeley Repertory Theatre; in New York at Primary Stages and Soho Rep.; and in England at the Barbican Theater in London and Birmingham Repertory Theatre.
