American Conservatory Theater, San Francisco’s Tony Award-winning nonprofit theater, nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training, and an ongoing engagement with our community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff, we embrace our responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent our relationship to the rich theatrical literature and traditions that are our collective legacy, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. A commitment to the highest standards informs every aspect of our creative work. Founded by pioneer of the regional theater movement William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season in 1967. Since then, we’ve performed more than 350 productions to a combined audience of more than seven million people. We reach more than 250,000 people through our productions and programs every year.

Rising from the rubble of the catastrophic earthquake and fires of 1906 and immediately hailed as the “perfect playhouse,” the beautiful, historic Geary Theater has been our home since the beginning. When the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake ripped a gaping hole in the ceiling, destroying the proscenium arch and dumping tons of debris on the first six rows of orchestra seats, the San Francisco community rallied to raise a record-breaking $30 million to rebuild it. The theater reopened in 1996 with a production of The Tempest directed by Perloff, who took over after A.C.T.’s second artistic director, gentleman artist Ed Hastings, retired in 1992.

Perloff’s 23-season tenure has been marked by groundbreaking productions of classical works and new translations creatively colliding with exceptional contemporary theater; cross-disciplinary performances and international collaborations; and “locavore” theater—theater made by, for, and about the San Francisco area. Her fierce commitment to audience engagement ushered in a new era of InterACT events and dramaturgical publications, inviting everyone to explore what goes on behind the scenes.

A.C.T.’s 46-year-old Conservatory, led by Melissa Smith, is at the center of our work. Our three-year, fully accredited Master of Fine Arts Program has moved to the forefront of America’s actor training programs, our intensive Summer Training Congress attracts enthusiasts from around the world, and our San Francisco Semester welcomes undergraduate students who want a taste of the grad school experience. Other programs include the world-famous Young Conservatory for students ages 8 to 19, led by 25-year veteran Craig Slaight, and Studio A.C.T., our expansive course of study for adults. Our alumni often grace our mainstage and perform around the Bay Area, as well as stages and screens across the country.

A.C.T. also brings the benefits of theater-based arts education to more than 10,000 Bay Area school students each year. Central to our ACTsmart education programs, run by Director of Education & Community Programs Elizabeth Brodersen, is the longstanding Student Matinee (SMAT) program, which has brought hundreds of thousands of young people to A.C.T. performances since 1968. We also provide touring Will on Wheels Shakespeare productions, teaching-artist residencies, in-school workshops, and in-depth study materials to Bay Area schools and community-based organizations.

With our increased presence in the Central Market neighborhood marked by the opening of The Costume Shop theater, the renovation of The Strand Theater across from UN Plaza, and the launch of our mobile Stage Coach initiative, A.C.T. is poised to continue its leadership role in securing the future of theater for San Francisco and the nation.

A.C.T. FAVORITE AND ACADEMY AWARD NOMINEE
David Strathairn (Underneath the Lintel at A.C.T.; film: Good Night, and Good Luck; Lincoln; The Second Best Exotic Marigold Hotel) and A.C.T. M.F.A. Program alumnus Dan Clegg (Major Barbara) return to A.C.T. for a three-week engagement at The Strand. In 1945, in a Long Island hospital, a young man named Chester Bailey (Clegg) has fallen under the charge of Dr. Philip Cotton (Strathairn). Chester is recovering from devastating injuries that have made his imagination the safest haven he has. Wounded by his own disappointments in life and love, Cotton must figure out how to heal this unusual patient and is forced to make an ethical decision that calls into question everything he has ever believed—leading him to new realizations about love, hope, and the saving grace of the imagination. Written by Emmy Award-winning playwright and screenwriter Joseph Dougherty and directed by veteran stage and television director Ron Lagomarsino, Chester Bailey is a compelling account of the lies we tell ourselves in order to find wholeness and truth.

Dear Friends,

In this inaugural season at The Strand, everything is happening for the first time. The show that launched The Rembe Theater, Love and Information, was our first mainstage production in the space. Then we unveiled the world premiere of our first Strand commission, Monstress, and saw our theater filled with so many new faces exploring Lysley Tenorio’s Filipino stories-into-plays. And now, The Unfortunates—our first musical!

We know The Strand will welcome the pounding rhythms and soaring melodies of this generous show after the Young Conservatory baptized the space last summer with I’m Still Standing: The Music of Elton John, directed by the inimitable Craig Slaight. What I find so exciting about The Rembe Theater at The Strand is that it is both intimate and epic. While the audience is extremely close to the action onstage, there is also room within those bold red walls for big ideas, big feelings, big sounds, and big dreams—which is perfect for The Unfortunates.

We first encountered this vivid new musical in an earlier incarnation at the Oregon Shakespeare Festival, where it was written and performed by the team of remarkably creative guys whom you will see onstage today. With its irresistible tunes and its story of a captured soldier navigating a dream world in search of his lost love, The Unfortunates has the combustive drive of a legendary concert or a gospel revival meeting.

The passion and energy at OSF brought audiences to their feet, and we have been delighted to continue working on the structure and storytelling of the piece through our New Strands commissioning and development program. In collaboration with director Shana Cooper, the Unfortunates creators have been in residence at A.C.T. for two years, nurturing this surprising blues musical for its run at The Strand. We are thrilled to fill these walls with inspirational songs and vivid storytelling, and we are so grateful to you for joining us. When we were planning how to program The Strand, one trustee remarked that we should let the building teach us what it ultimately wants to be. Sage advice. In the first six months, we have learned we can put an M.F.A. production in The Rueff and a mainstage show in The Rembe and play them simultaneously with great success. We hosted rollicking Filipino American open-mic nights in the lobby during Monstress and drew huge late-night crowds. We have brewed artisanal coffee in The Strand Cafe to entice passersby into the building during the day. We held a big Conservatory costume party, Spooked at The Strand, which took over the entire building (including the LED screen) to raise funds for our M.F.A. Program. Our Young Conservatory and Education & Community Programs hosted the first transbay Collaborative Youth Arts Project with Destiny Arts Center with the world premiere of Chris Webb’s Snakes, and the teens of Downtown High School presented their first exhibition in The Rueff, sharing their powerful stories with the greater San Francisco community. We’ve donated The Rueff to sister companies like Magic Theatre free of charge through our Community Space-Sharing Initiative, and we’ve presented Bill Irwin’s magical new work in progress, On Beckett, for three sold-out performances in December.

This is only the beginning. Some of you here today are longtime subscribers, and others are coming to A.C.T. for the first time. Please let us know your thoughts and ideas about The Strand now that you’re here—the possibilities are infinite! Meanwhile, many thanks for coming to The Unfortunates. You’re in for a wonderful ride!

Best,
Carey Perloff

From Betty Boop to Beatboxing

An Interview With The Creators of The Unfortunates

By | Simon Hodgson

In 2013, a new musical took the Oregon Shakespeare Festival by storm. Blending bluesy grit with contemporary syncopation, The Unfortunates became a crowd-pleasing cult hit that had audiences jumping. It’s the story of Big Joe, a tough-talking soldier who signs up for war but falls into a shadowy dream world in which he must fight to save his love, Rae. The musical was created by Jon Beavers, Kristoffer Diaz, Casey Lee Hurt, Ian Merrigan, and Ramiz Monsef, a tightknit band of artists who drew inspiration from mythology and hip-hop, guitar ballads and graphic novels.

We caught up with three of the creators to find out more about the amazing journey of The Unfortunates.
WHAT’S THE INSPIRATION BEHIND THIS NEW MUSICAL?
RAMIZ MONSEF: The seed of the whole thing is the blues song “St. James Infirmary.” The first time I ever heard that song was in a Betty Boop cartoon, where Cab Calloway sings it. It’s this seven-minute-long Snow-White cartoon from 1933. I saw it as a little kid and it haunted me.

SO, BLUES AND CARTOONS. RAMIZ, DON’T YOU HAVE A BACKGROUND IN GRAPHIC NOVELS AS WELL?
MONSEF: I have a background in being a total comic-book nerd, and I’ve got boxes of Spider-Man back issues to prove it. The character design and the idea of using hands as a metaphor came out of my head, then were brought to life by our incredible designers, scenic designer Sibyl Wickersheimer and costume designer Katherine O’Neill.

IT SEEMS LIKE THERE’S A HELLY BOOP ELEMENT TO BIG JOE, WITH THE SUPERSIZED FISTS.
MONSEF: Yeah. Hellboy and the Goon, absolutely. I’ve always found hands really fascinating. I also like Egon Schiele, whose figures all have these crazy fingers. We drew inspiration from everywhere.

JON BEAVERS: We also pulled from action movies. And we were really interested in propaganda posters from the two world wars. In World War II, the artwork was heavily influenced by [comic-book artist] Jack Kirby, what was happening in graphic novels, and cartoons from the New Yorker.

THE UNFORTUNATES SEEMS TO BE ROOTED IN THE TWO WORLD WARS—OR IS IT SET MORE IN A GENERALIZED WORLD AT WAR?
CASEY LEE HURT: It’s the idea of a world at war. World War I is where a lot of our influences are drawn from, but we’re trying not to put it specifically in that time period. The reason for that is because the enemy in the play is not a regime. It’s fear. For us, that’s the most important element—fear is the thing that every generation faces. And we want that to be transparent and true throughout.

THREE OF THE FIVE CREATORS WERE ORIGINALLY PART OF AN A CAPPELLA TRIO CALLED 3BLINDMICE. HOW DO YOU GO FROM THERE TO A SHOW AT THE OREGON SHAKESPEARE FESTIVAL?
MONSEF: Ian, Jon, and I were all living in New York and spending a lot of time together. If we ended up at a party, we wouldn’t be talking to people, we’d be off in a corner, freestyling and beatboxing. And then the party would come to us. 3blindmice happened naturally because we found comrades that spoke the same language.

As far as coming out to Oregon, that was one of those crazy moments in which you ask for something ridiculous and you get it. I got an offer to come out to OSF, and I said, “Thanks, but can I bring my friends out there to work on something?” We’d been throwing around the idea of putting something together, because we all have backgrounds in theater. When 3blindmice would perform a show, we wouldn’t just get on a microphone and stand there. We had a number where I died and then Ian brought me back to life with beatboxing.

IN FAMILIES, EVERYONE FINDS THEIR ROLE. YOU GET THE PEACEMAKER OR THE TROUBLEMAKER OR THE COMEDIAN. HOW DOES THAT BREAK DOWN AMONG YOU GUYS?
BEAVERS: Kris [Diaz] was the gatherer of concepts, which allowed other people to be up on their feet and spitballing. Ramiz is excellent with dialogue. He’s an incredible wordsmith. Ian and I just say a bunch of things, and maybe two out of five are pretty good. Then Ramiz grabs one of them and says it back in a way that has vibe.

As well as being the instrumentalist and contributing unbelievable amounts of melody and harmony, Casey is the idea distillery. He’s straight to the quick. If Ramiz poetizes something that has real guts to it, then Casey will say it in three words and give us what we’re doing thematically.

But that makes for a pretty picture of what’s going on in the room. Honestly, everybody’s shifting roles a lot, and sometimes we’re just hanging around and making fart jokes—but don’t write that down!

HURT: I would like to nominate Ian as the MVP. He’s done so much work with managing shit, and he’s a peacemaker at heart.

MONSEF: We’re kind of like Voltron. Individually, the members of Lion Force can’t do a whole lot. They’re pieces of a robot, but they’re just not as powerful as when they form up and make Voltron. You get us all together in the room, and there’s some magic crackle that happens. I can only imagine what it looks like to somebody walking in off the street. They’d either think we’re geniuses or we’re bat-shit crazy.
The nucleus of The Unfortunates, the initial inspiration, is “St. James Infirmary,” a classic blues song with mysterious origins. “It represents a morphing tradition,” says The Unfortunates music director Casey Lee Hurt. “No one knows where the thing started.”

It’s impossible to know the origins of the song because it derives from an old European folk music tradition, which was based on sharing songs orally. The earliest reference to anything resembling “St. James Infirmary” is “The Unfortunate Rake,” an Irish folk song from the seventeenth century.
In America, “The Unfortunate Rake” inspired songs in several genres before it finally became “St. James Infirmary,” a song known by many blues musicians in the early twentieth century and made popular by Louis Armstrong’s 1928 recording. Despite intensive study about its origins and meaning, the song will remain mysterious. But knowing who first sang it doesn’t matter. Music historian Robert W. Harwood says, “Regardless of where a musician first heard the song, we can be reasonably certain that it came to that place from elsewhere, assembled from bits and pieces of other songs, from bits and pieces of other people’s experiences. It was a song written by Everybody.”

Like the history of “St. James Infirmary,” the score of The Unfortunates incorporates a wide range of American musical genres, including gospel, blues, and hip-hop. Each of the creators comes from a different musical background, so it makes sense that they would make a show that is a mash-up of different American sounds. Ian Merrigan is a folk artist and singer-songwriter; Ramiz Monsef is aligned with R&B; Jon Beavers is a lyricist; and Casey Lee Hurt, a third-generation former Southern Baptist preacher, comes from a background of gospel and blues. The thread that ties them all together is hip-hop. “We all grew up on hip-hop and loved listening to it and spent a lot of time and energy in that scene,” says Hurt. “The fusing of all those genres just came together naturally. We brought the skill sets that we had to the table, and the story grew from there.”

In the beginning, the process of creating the music was, as Hurt says, “pretty hodgepodge.” When they first began working on the show, everyone involved was split up geographically. How do you write a musical with collaborators all the way across the country? If you’re one of the creators of The Unfortunates, you get an idea for a song, call your friends, and leave it on their voicemail. After they collected enough material that way, they gathered it up and brought it into the studio.

Once the creators got together in a room, their primary goal was to sing and get ideas down on paper. The plot, the characters, and the songs came at the same time. “As we got the idea for a scene or a character, almost immediately we would write the song that would fit in that character’s genes, in their voice,” says Hurt.

The creators of The Unfortunates may come from different musical backgrounds, but they all have the desire to show audiences the power of musical narrative. Storytelling is a communal art form; it unites a group of people through the shared experience of a narrative. But The Unfortunates doesn’t just connect individual audience members to each other. It also gives us an opportunity to fight back. “War and music,” says Hurt, “are two things that, for better or for worse, America’s always had. And there’s no question that music has been an outcry, a response to injustice. We sing in the hard times—in the midst of tragedy looking for solace. But we also look for a catalyst to change things for the better.”
THE ORDINARY WORLD
We are introduced to the Ordinary World. Usually, there are two polarized forces straining against each other, but it’s far in the background of the Hero’s life. The Hero is drawn so the audience can relate to and sympathize with him.

THE CALL TO ADVENTURE
The rumblings of change—the Ordinary World is not as it once was. The Hero is informed that there is something—a treasure to be gained or goal to be accomplished—that can solve the problems of the Ordinary World, but there is a journey he must take to retrieve or achieve it. Think of the ghost of Hamlet’s father telling him to kill his uncle.

REFUSAL OF THE CALL
The Hero denies the call to adventure. Something inside stops him from stepping up to action.

MEETING WITH THE MENTOR
The Hero meets with someone older or wiser—or consults a more mature inner self—in order to gain skills and knowledge necessary to go on the adventure. Think Gandalf from The Lord of the Rings, or the witches in Macbeth.

“We are all mythology nuts,” says Ramiz Monsef about himself and the other creators of The Unfortunates. "Living in New York, each one of us would be reading a different Joseph Campbell book and comparing notes. Mythology is in our DNA." Although every society has its own myths and storytelling methods, American writer Joseph Campbell points to a commonality among mythological stories across cultures. In The Hero with a Thousand Faces (1949), he explains what he calls the “monomyth.” Looking at the 12 stages of the monomyth journey, can you identify the ways The Unfortunates is itself a modern-day American myth?
With newfound knowledge or skills, the Hero commits to the adventure by crossing over into the Unfamiliar World.

05 CROSSING THE THRESHOLD

The Hero must figure out how things work in the Unfamiliar World by determining whom he can trust. His relationships with others are tested, proving who is friend and who is foe.

06 ALLIES AND ENEMIES

The hero faces death—either he or another character almost dies, or another character does die—like Ophelia's suicide in Hamlet.

08 THE ORDEAL

Together, the Hero and the Allies prepare to approach the most dangerous place in the journey, where the treasure lies.

07 THE HERO'S APPROACH

After facing death, the Hero takes possession of the treasure he has been seeking or achieves the goal he has been trying to accomplish.

09 THE REWARD

The Hero wants to complete the adventure and tries to return back safely to the Ordinary World, but is pursued by enemies or other threats. He is in danger of losing the treasure, or perhaps it seems that his accomplishment might not be successful. This is Orpheus leaving the underworld with the warning not to look back at his love, Eurydice.

10 THE ROAD BACK HOME

The Hero returns completely to the Ordinary World—or continues on his journey. He still has some element of the treasure won or accomplishment achieved, which has the power to change the Hero—for better or for worse.

12 RETURN WITH THE ELIXIR

The Hero is tested one more time in a battle with the enemy. There is a final sacrifice, another moment of death and rebirth—but bigger, grander, more universal. Through the Hero's actions, the strained Ordinary World is healed.

BENJAMIN SCHEUER WALKS ONSTAGE. HE LOOKS SHY, this singer-songwriter, with his bashful smile, his six guitars, and his cornflower-blue suit. Then he starts to play, and within a few verses, he has the audience utterly entranced.

Scheuer’s inspiring one-man show, The Lion, is one part love story, one part memoir, one part musical, and packed full of joy from the first bar to the final bow. He sings of his late father, who created a banjo from a cookie tin for his two-year-old son and inspired him to become a musician, but who was also prone to violent rages. He sings of the girlfriend he loved and lost, and the cancer he fought and beat. “Writing a song is a way to feel less alone,” says Scheuer. “I can take something bad and turn it into something good.” The heartbreak he felt about his relationship with his dad became just one more ingredient in his folk-rock fusion. Add a dash of romance and the pain of battling the big C, and you have a show that became a surprise hit when it premiered at Manhattan Theatre Club in 2014.

It isn’t just audiences who have warmed to Scheuer. In 2015, his laid-back charm and skillful songwriting earned him the Drama Desk Award for Outstanding Solo Performance (following in the footsteps of John Douglas Thompson, who won the award in 2014 for Satchmo at the Waldorf). Blending an irresistible message with intimate storytelling, this young singer-songwriter has created an uplifting musical that will send audiences home overjoyed.

“ONE VOICE, TWO HANDS, AND SIX GUITARS . . . AT THE CONCLUSION OF A RECENT PERFORMANCE, THE AUDIENCE STOOD AND ROARED.”

The New Yorker
BACK TO THE SOURCE IS A.C.T.’S UNIQUE, WEEK-LONG professional development program in which educators from all over the world come together and immerse themselves in the transformative power of performance. Taught by A.C.T. professional artists, faculty from our conservatory, and national leaders in arts education, this comprehensive course is a chance for teachers to take creative risks, bring new insight to their classroom practices, and ignite their passion for theater.

Throughout the week, educators attend classes in such subjects as voice, movement, and devised theater, as well as sessions on how they can incorporate what they learn in Back to the Source into their classrooms. At the end of the week, they share what they’ve learned in a theatrical presentation, taking the stage to directly experience the thrill of live performance.

The program isn’t just for drama teachers—the lessons taught through making theater can apply to all kinds of classrooms, from engineering to English, and can be used with learners of all ages, from kindergarten to graduate students. Last summer, Back to the Source hosted a wide array of educators, including a writing professor from Massachusetts, a drama teacher from Singapore, and a math teacher from Berkeley. To make the program as accessible as possible for local educators, A.C.T. offers scholarships to Bay Area public school teachers.

In the 2015-16 school year, the lessons these educators learned last summer will be passed on to more than four thousand students. Theater teaches a variety of real-world skills: public speaking, teamwork, risk-taking, close reading and textual analysis, creative problem-solving, and many more. These are skills that can apply to any discipline, whether it’s theater, music, writing, or science. Randy Katz, professor of electrical engineering and computer science at UC Berkeley and a 2015 Back to the Source participant, says, “I learned how arts education teaches ensemble and creativity, and how it gets us out of our comfort zones. I would like to think about how to build that into my classes.”

Ultimately, Back to the Source seeks to inspire educators of all kinds and reinvigorate their love of teaching. “After completing Back to the Source, I feel energized, motivated, and ready to start the school year,” says Carolyn Steel, an elementary music teacher for the Paradise Unified School District in California. “Having taught for more than 30 years, I needed this institute to jump-start me into fresh and new ways of teaching and learning.”

If you are an educator of any kind, Back to the Source can benefit you and your students.
