CARYL CHURCHILL IS PERHAPS THE MOST acclaimed female playwright in the English-speaking world, and simultaneously the most elusive. Critic Charles Spencer has called her the “least predictable of contemporary playwrights.” Her work has been described as elliptical, provocative, shocking, confounding—and, over the years, it has become significantly more pared down, devoid of stage directions or notes, which only seems to contribute to her enduring mystique.

Although Churchill has been writing plays for over five decades, she stopped giving interviews many years ago. She rarely comments on critics’ analyses of her work, but her past interviews and the words of her close collaborators, of whom there are many, continue to spark the imaginations of those who recognize the multiple ways in which she has pushed dramatic boundaries over the course of her career.

Feminist and socialist politics are important facets of Churchill’s plays, as her work challenges the oppressions and repressions of gender, class, sex, and race—but her bold stylization is an equally prominent feature of her writing. The fact that her work ranges from epic Brechtian dramas to surreal “anti-plays” to disconnected slice-of-life episodes is part of what makes it difficult to define Churchill’s style. Flashbacks, twisted chronologies, overlapping dialogue, contradiction, repetition of word and gesture, and different actors playing the same character in different scenes are just some of the devices Churchill has employed in her plays.

Given the scope of Churchill’s experimentation (with form as well as process), many critics have noted that answering the question “What is a Caryl Churchill play?” leaves most people scratching their heads in puzzlement.

Dear Friends,

Welcome to the inaugural production at our beautiful new Strand Theater. As you take your seats in this magically reimagined space, I hope you will take a minute to gaze up and look all around you; you will see the theater’s original 1917 moldings and lovingly restored ventilation grilles on the ceiling, adjacent to contemporary architectural features and state-of-the-art theater technology. This blend of old and new, decorative and functional, along with the lively vermillion of the walls balanced by the subtle grays and blacks of the seats and stairs, ushers in a new era for American Conservatory Theater. We will have the opportunity to present work in a more intimate setting, to welcome new artists and audiences into the A.C.T. family, to showcase the talent of our young artists in training, and to expand our repertoire in thrilling ways.

Given that The Strand is the first major cultural center to open in what has come to be known as the “tech corridor” of Central Market, it seems fitting to launch our work in this new home with a play that delves deeply and incisively into the strange collision of data and desire for meaning that epitomizes our tech-saturated times. Caryl Churchill is a playwright of immense imagination who marries form and content in a unique way. As she set about to explore what is happening to our personal lives and to our sense of self in the context of information overload, she created a play whose form perfectly mirrors its content. Love and Information is composed of 57 short scenes, each one a miniature playlet in which individuals search for meaning and love in a mysterious and complex digital age. Churchill does not specify who the characters in each scene are; it is up to the director and the creative team to decide what each scene means, how to interpret it, and whom to cast. Neither gender nor age is spelled out, so an enormous amount of creative leeway is offered to the artists and audience members tackling the play. I love this aspect of Churchill’s work; as a playwright, she raises the bar on collaboration and invites the richest possible exploration of the major issues facing us today by leaving room for our own imagination. Each scene prompts us to question our assumptions. What is God? What is love? How are we to interpret the glut of information flooding our email inboxes at every moment? In a landscape of facts, is there room for faith? For family? How are we to ascribe meaning to our lives when everything seems to be reducible to statistics? The scenes of Love and Information mount up inexorably—often hilariously, sometimes heartbreakingly—and combine to offer a rich theatrical stew that wakes us up to the contradictions of our world in remarkable, visceral ways.

This has been a beautiful spring for A.C.T., with Kwame Kwei-Armah’s moving Let There Be Love leading into Mark Lamos’s sumptuous and romantic vision of A Little Night Music. We are already hard at work preparing the 2015–16 season, including our explosive Pulitzer Prize–winning opener, Between Riverside and Crazy, and our lyrical and laugh-filled world premiere, Monstress, which will play at The Strand this fall. We are so grateful to all those who nurtured and supported us as we opened our second venue. As we learn how to operate in two spaces and two neighborhoods simultaneously, please let us know how we can help make Strand-going the best possible experience for all of you. Feel free to call my hotline at 415.439.2459 with any observations, questions, or concerns.

Enjoy Love and Information, and thank you for coming!

Needing to Know and Needing to Love
The Enduring Mystique of Caryl Churchill

By Nirmala Nataraj

CARYL CHURCHILL IS PERHAPS THE MOST acclaimed female playwright in the English-speaking world, and simultaneously the most elusive. Critic Charles Spencer has called her the “least predictable of contemporary playwrights.” Her work has been described as elliptical, provocative, shocking, confounding—and, over the years, it has become significantly more pared down, devoid of stage directions or notes, which only seems to contribute to her enduring mystique.

Although Churchill has been writing plays for over five decades, she stopped giving interviews many years ago. She rarely comments on critics’ analyses of her work, but her past interviews and the words of her close collaborators, of whom there are many, continue to spark the imaginations of those who recognize the multiple ways in which she has pushed dramatic boundaries over the course of her career.

Feminist and socialist politics are important facets of Churchill’s plays, as her work challenges the oppressions and repressions of gender, class, sex, and race—but her bold stylization is an equally prominent feature of her writing. The fact that her work ranges from epic Brechtian dramas to surreal “anti-plays” to disconnected slice-of-life episodes is part of what makes it difficult to define Churchill’s style. Flashbacks, twisted chronologies, overlapping dialogue, contradiction, repetition of word and gesture, and different actors playing the same character in different scenes are just some of the devices Churchill has employed in her plays.

Given the scope of Churchill’s experimentation (with form as well as process), many critics have noted that answering the question “What is a Caryl Churchill play?” leaves most people scratching their heads in puzzlement.
Playwright April de Angelis says, “She has turned the idea of what a play should be over and over, revisioning it beyond the accepted imaginative boundaries, to produce plays that are always revolutionary.”

As eager as they are to be heard, according to Churchill’s publisher of over 40 years, Nick Hern, her characters themselves are often less “talky” (preferring to justify their existence not with long speeches but with activity) and less obviously categorizable as villains or protagonists than those of other playwrights. Actor Maxine Peake, who played the title role in Churchill’s The Skriker (about a malevolent fairy who manipulates two teenage mothers) in 2014 at London’s Royal Exchange Theatre, describes Churchill’s characters as “coming more from a physical impulse rather than a cerebral one.”

Churchill and her collaborators are often surprised by the plays that emerge from her imagination. Hern says, “The plays just turn up, without warning. I think she’s one of those shamanistic writers, in the way Harold Pinter was. A play isn’t planned or premeditated; it’s scratching an itch. They come to me and I sit down to read them, having absolutely no idea what the length or subject matter or form will be.” Much like Pinter, Churchill is also mordantly witty, whether she is training her eye on large-scale social ills or the quirky dynamics of an intimate relationship. A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff says, “Churchill’s plays are supremely alive because the scenes are endlessly active. They’re about transactions, power, competition, desire.”

Love and Information premiered at the Royal Court Theatre in 2012, under the direction of Churchill’s frequent collaborator James Macdonald. De Angelis notes that this enigmatic play is an exploration of two of the most powerful human themes: needing to know and needing to love. Love and Information is a collection of 57 short, episodic vignettes that use a series of interactions between mostly unnamed characters to explore knowledge, meaning, and how we make sense of information in our lives. Each vignette is self-contained and characters are not repeated from one scene to the next, meaning that the dozen actors in our production are responsible for playing multiple roles. Some of the scenes last only five seconds, and none are longer than five minutes. Because Churchill does not include stage directions or character descriptions in Love and Information, the artistic team is tasked with filling in the blanks and creating the world of the play according to the production’s specific needs and intentions.

Overall, Love and Information presents an assortment of stories and perspectives that leave much to the viewer’s imagination. Indeed, a viewer’s process of making sense of the play may be the ultimate point that Churchill is attempting to make. As she has said, “I don’t set out to find a bizarre way of writing, I certainly don’t think that you have to force it. But, on the whole . . . I enjoy finding the form that seems to best fit what I’m thinking about.”

“DECISION”

(a scene from Caryl Churchill’s script for Love and Information, exactly as it appears on the page)

I’ve written down all the reasons to leave the country and all the reasons to stay.

So how does that work out?

There’s things on both sides.

How do you feel about it?

No, I’m trying to make a rational decision based on the facts.

Do you want me to decide for you?

Based on what? The facts don’t add up.

I’d rather you stayed here. Does that help?

ABOUT THE PLAY

DIRECTOR CASEY STANGL RETURNS TO A.C.T. AFTER STAGING

David Ives's Venus in Fur last spring. That production was packed with intense, edgily comic exchanges about sexual politics, generating plenty of heat with its unexpected plot twists. Now, Stangl brings her talent for seamless transitions and precise pacing to Love and Information, a play that offered her a blank creative canvas that she describes as simultaneously “exhilarating and terrifying.”

Stangl’s early years as a director were spent in San Francisco, primarily at the Eureka Theatre. Among the plays she experienced while in the city was a production of Caryl Churchill’s Top Girls, which had its Bay Area premiere at the Eureka and then moved to the Curran Theatre. Coincidentally, the first job Stangl was offered after she became a full-time freelance director was the opportunity to stage Top Girls at the Guthrie Theater in Minneapolis.

She says she was awed to discover an elasticity in Churchill’s language that made the play relevant and provocative nearly two decades after its premiere.

Stangl found her stride in directing new work and reimagining classics through a bold contemporary lens. Her movement background and interest in visual composition have helped her weave the complex fabric of Love and Information. At a new-play festival in Southern California a week before rehearsals began, Stangl was happy to talk about the themes and ideas that have piqued her imagination, what it’s been like to include the specific communities of San Francisco in Churchill’s scenes, and whether the gap between love and information is truly as wide as it may seem.

REVEALING A SPECTRUM OF HUMANITY

An Interview with Director Casey Stangl

By Beatrice Basso

Scenic designer Robert Brill’s rendering for A.C.T.’s 2015 production of Love and Information
How did you react when A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff asked you to direct Love and Information?

I was thrilled. Carey described the play, which is made up of disparate scenes with no common characters. Then she talked about it being the first production at The Strand Theater, which is located in San Francisco at a kind of crossroads between various communities—from homeless people to tourists to tech workers to government workers to immigrant mom-and-pop store owners. She felt that Love and Information was the perfect play with which to open this new space.

What were your first impressions of the play?

Carey told me, “The play is wide open.” When you read the first scene, there are just lines and no character names. I remember thinking, “Wow, she wasn’t kidding, this is wide open.” When you have that amount of choice, you can do anything, but it also means you have to find a container and a way into the play. With most plays, the container is usually already built for you, so this is an interesting challenge.

You were already familiar with Caryl Churchill’s work, as you directed Top Girls for the Guthrie Theater over a decade ago.

Yes. They are very different plays, but they share some commonalities; for instance, Churchill’s ability to manipulate language, to write characters and scenes in which so much is happening below the words, is important in both works. Love and Information is so striking because these scenes range from a quarter of a page to three pages, but despite such a small amount of dialogue, you can pull back the curtain and imagine what’s happening between these characters. This illumination of a moment in someone’s life is thrilling to be able to evoke. Churchill has a very unflinching, unsentimental view of life, but there’s so much hope and humanity and joy in her perspective, as well.

Generally, directors are asked to guide an audience through a linear, narrative, realistic journey.

Absolutely. I would say there is almost always a story being told, even in plays that have a nonlinear structure, or that bounce around in time. But that’s not what we’re doing here. There’s not one specific story we’re telling; the play has a radical form in which several individual narratives add up to something larger that reveals how we live and what it means to be a human on this planet right now. Because there are so many different themes and ideas, they will resonate differently for different people.

What do you think makes this play relevant at this particular moment in time?

When somebody told me about the play originally, they said that it was about living in the Digital Age. So before I read it, I really thought that it was about dealing with the age of Facebook, and that sort of thing. There are certainly hints of that in the play, but it’s so much bigger and broader than that. Throughout history, there have been large technological leaps—such as the invention of the wheel or the Industrial Revolution—that have radically changed the way people live. With such changes, there have always been predictions that we’re going to lose our humanity. I remember when computers first became ubiquitous, people said, “Soon, no one will ever see each other, and we’ll never leave our homes, and robots will take over everything.” In fact, what happened was a proliferation of coffee shops so that people could actually come out and connect with each other. Churchill has tapped into the sense that, despite the constancy of dire predictions, humanity prevails. We just find different ways to continue to have this sense of connection.

[Love and Information] has a radical form in which several individual narratives add up to something larger that reveals how we live and what it means to be a human on this planet right now.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER

ACT-SF.ORG  |  415.749.2228

CLOUD NINE (1979) was the play that first brought Churchill international recognition. In the first act, a British family living in a colonized African country struggles with the oppressive gender roles of the Victorian era. The second act takes place in modern-day London (although only 25 years have passed for the characters from the first act), as they begin to rebel against and liberate themselves from the sexual roles that were assigned to them in a bygone era. Cross-gender and cross-racial casting underlines the biting satire in this farce about sexual politics and colonialism.

TOP GIRLS (1982) is Churchill’s most-produced play. Eschewing chronological storytelling, Churchill begins the play with Marlene, a manager at Top Girls Employment Agency, who has recently been promoted and is celebrating with a surreal and fragmented dinner party of semi-famous women from history and fiction. The final scene takes place a year earlier and features a confrontation between Marlene and her working-class sister, who has raised Marlene’s daughter as her own, thus underscoring what Marlene has had to give up in order to succeed as a professional woman. Inspired by the politics of Margaret Thatcher, this play explores the intersection between capitalist ambition and feminism.

DRUNK ENOUGH TO SAY I LOVE YOU? (2006) tells the story of a complex, borderline-abusive, and decidedly one-sided romantic relationship between Sam (who is the embodiment of America) and Guy (who is an American). The narrative of the love story is chronological—Guy is initially enamored with Sam and helps him carry out various political tasks, leaves when he becomes uncomfortable with the things Sam does, and eventually returns—but the play is set in an ambiguous time period, discussing events all the way back to World War II as if they had just happened. The play is a critique of blind nationalism, patriotic fervor, and the lies we tell ourselves in order to continue loving our country.

THE INNOVATION of CARYL CHURCHILL by SHANNON STOCKWELL

Critics have lauded Love and Information for its innovative structure. Theater scholar R. Darren Gobert writes, “[In this play], sharply drawn dots . . . collectively constitute an epic canvas that exceeds the sum of its pointillist parts.” Early in Churchill’s career, she wrote, “The role of the playwright is not to give answers but to ask questions. We need to find new questions, which may help us answer the old ones or make them unimportant, and this means new subjects and new forms.” As a result of her commitment to constant reinvention, Churchill’s plays are widely recognized as some of the most innovative of the past half-century.

A Spectacular Night at A.C.T.’s 2015 Gala

BY ANNA WOODRUFF

ON SATURDAY, APRIL 25, A.C.T. HOSTED OUR 2015 gala, Get Stranded, to support the incredible training and arts education offered by our Conservatory and our Education & Community Programs, which bring the power of live theater to more than 12,000 Bay Area students each year. This year, more than 350 gala attendees gathered in a tent on UN Plaza, in the heart of Central Market and across the street from our new Strand Theater. A.C.T. Director of Special Events Luz Perez says the location was a statement in and of itself: “We wanted to bring our guests to the neighborhood and give them access to The Strand.” The evening began with performances by Master of Fine Arts Program students and celebrated stage and film star Alan Cumming. Artistic Director Carey Perloff says the gala was “a magical night in the very center of the city; we watched the sun set as the amazing Alan Cumming regaled us with songs and stories against the backdrop of The Strand.”

The live auction was a great success; popular items included a pair of restored seats from the original Strand and a dinner for 12 at designer Ken Fulk’s Magic Factory with celebrity chef Nancy Oakes. The after-party ended the event with a bang, as DJ Flaxo spun music while guests danced the night away. The gala raised more than $850,000, thanks to supporters of our programs. We are confident this success will propel us forward as we celebrate the opening of The Strand.

Being in a play that invites so many interpretations made the rehearsal process an invigorating experience for the M.F.A. Program actors, all of whom have an affinity for trying on new characters and ideas. “Casey [Stangl, the director] was interested in a real sense of collaboration,” says Bernard. “There was a great sense of freedom.”

Some of the M.F.A. Program actors’ collaborators in the cast include such seasoned performers as Cindy Goldfield and A.C.T. Resident Artist Anthony Fusco. “Working with this group of incredible veteran actors is like being welcomed to eat lunch at the cool kids’ table,” says Liang. “Everyone is so smart, talented, warm, and inclusive.”

“Performing in Love and Information is kind of like jumping off the high dive for these actors,” says Smith. “How perfect for people who are in or have just graduated from the M.F.A. Program.”

Conservatory Director Melissa Smith is thrilled that these four students have had the opportunity to perform in Caryl Churchill’s newest play. “The M.F.A. Program teaches instrumental flexibility, professionalism, collaboration, and transformation,” she says. “Love and Information demands fluency in those areas. You could not pick a better test of our training.”

The very nature of the play is enticing to these four actors. “I love how innovative Churchill’s writing is,” says Salerno. “Each scene of Love and Information is completely different from the last, but there is the same longing and desire to connect.”

Love and Information presents actors with the challenge of performing multiple roles. “It’s exciting to be able to attack a show from multiple perspectives,” says Jordan. “You have to follow your instincts and jump in. You have to know who you are, where you are, right away.”

A.C.T. IS THRILLED TO INCLUDE IN OUR 2015–16 subscription season the world premiere of Monstress, an evening of two one-act plays that explore the resilience of a community struggling to find home in the ever-shifting sands of the American dream. The project will be the first production at The Strand Theater this fall.

In these two contemporary tales about the rich history of Filipino-American life in California, adapted from the acclaimed collection of short stories by Bay Area author Lysley Tenorio, a vibrant array of characters strive for personal transformations that are seemingly impossible, wonderfully moving, and distinctly theatrical. The infamous eviction of Filipino residents from San Francisco’s International Hotel in the 1970s sets the background for Philip Kan Gotanda’s stirring Save the I-Hotel, which illuminates the dangers of love that crosses forbidden territories. Sean San José’s Presenting . . . the Monstress! moves us from the streets of Manila to the Bay Area, where a Filipino B-movie director has been seduced by the opportunity to work with a shady American filmmaker.

Tenorio’s book of short stories was published in 2012 to great critical acclaim; NPR said, “[Tenorio] has taken a uniquely Filipino-American perspective, polyglot and glittering with cinema dreams, and used it to make a bold collection of stories of the rejected, the helpless and the lost. Monstress is the debut of a singular talent.” A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff was immediately entranced by the potential theatricality of the stories. Through New Strands, our recently created new-play development program, we commissioned four artists to select the tales that most inspired them and adapt them for the stage. During the workshopping process, Perloff discovered that Gotanda’s Save the I-Hotel and San José’s Presenting . . . the Monstress! could share a cast and would be perfect to present alongside each other. As another part of the Monstress project, Colman Domingo’s The Brother(s), adapted from Tenorio’s story “The Brother,” will be presented as a late-night event after the show on October 18 at 10 p.m. and as a part of our Scripts reading series on October 19.

So far, the development process, which has featured several readings along the way, has proved to be “smooth, fun, and generous,” says Gotanda. “I’ve known and worked with A.C.T. for years, and they are as close to a theater family as one can have.”

Perloff, Gotanda, and San José have invited Tenorio to be a part of the development of these plays, and he has attended every reading. “I love seeing how these artists have taken my stories and transformed them,” says Tenorio. “While they’ve preserved the integrity of the stories and have remained true to the characters, they’ve reimagined the material as well, so that it feels like my stories have new life infused into them.”

engage in important dialogue about issues facing our city and country,” he says.

The festival also includes I’m Still Standing, a musical based on the songs of Sir Elton John. Almost a decade ago, Slaight approached John to request permission to write the book for a play that would weave together the songwriter’s most beloved works as a tribute to John’s iconic place in the music industry. John gave Slaight his blessing, and seven years ago, the musical was born.

I’m Still Standing is an epic tale about a girl named Bennie, a teenage pop icon who embarks on a journey toward acceptance and self-discovery. The play will be performed on The Strand’s mainstage, The Toni Rembe Theater, and will mark the first time cabaret seating is used in the space.

The Two-Play Festival offers 35 roles for young people and is a cornerstone of the YC’s summer curriculum. Slaight is excited to bring the talent of so many of our students together, especially given his passion for presenting new work that reflects the voices of our youth. “I began commissioning plays for young actors because I knew it would be a way to tap into their true creative talent,” says Slaight.

A POETIC EXPLORATION OF DIVERSITY AND A statement-making musical about embracing one’s true self will stand side by side in our Young Conservatory’s first-ever Two-Play Festival this summer. Envisioned by YC Director Craig Slaight as the perfect way to celebrate the opening of The Strand and the YC’s permanent home in our new theater, the festival is a landmark opportunity to showcase work created for and performed by young people. The festival launches this August at The Strand, making its productions the YC’s first full shows in our new performance venue and education center.

“The festival puts the YC at the center of our community in an exciting way, and it is also a great opportunity to collaborate with A.C.T.’s Education & Community Programs department,” says Slaight, who commissioned a new script for this project, which will be directed by A.C.T. Community Artistic Director Tyrone Davis, in collaboration with Oakland’s Destiny Arts Center.

Written by Los Angeles–based playwright and poet Christopher Webb, the project brings together a diverse group of young performers from the YC, our Education & Community Programs, and Oakland’s Destiny Arts Center, a predominantly movement-based organization that engages young people with themes of resilience and social justice. Performances take place at both Destiny Arts Center and The Strand’s second-floor performance space, The Rueff.

Davis is pleased that our Central Market venue will draw new audiences of both young people and adults during the festival. “The Strand will involve the community in everything we do and hopefully make people feel welcomed and like they have a space to see and create theater, not to mention A.C.T. PROVIDES INTENSIVE TRAINING FOR those who aspire to be theater professionals, but skills learned in an acting class can positively affect a person’s life beyond the stage. Many of the classes offered by Studio A.C.T., the Conservatory’s extended-learning program, stimulate creativity while cultivating leadership, business, and social skills.

Classes specially created for business-minded students include Acting for the Executive Presence, which helps participants create onstage presence and use acting skills to enhance pitches, keynotes, and public speeches necessary in the corporate world. The Art of Public Speaking covers basic voice, speech, diction, and body-language techniques necessary for everything from sales pitches to TED talks to wedding toasts.

Although some of the available classes will be especially compelling to people in the corporate world, Director of Studio A.C.T. Nick Gabriel says that our offerings are for artists and non-artists alike: “These classes are all about engendering empathy and trust, and using your imagination with an ensemble of people to accomplish a collective goal in a short period of time, just as you would if you were assigned to a team in a corporate environment.”

Filipp Nisenzoun took Acting for the Executive Presence in the summer of 2014. Nisenzoun, a product manager for Appirio (a company that helps build cloud-powered businesses), says that Studio A.C.T. taught him a range of lessons, including “appropriate body language and vocal skills, and more advanced lessons, like structuring presentations and handling questions. These skills help ease self-consciousness and let your authentic self emerge.”

Conservatory Operations Manager Dan Kolodny says, “Acting is fun to learn, and it provides a skill set that people don’t typically receive in regular corporate training.”

Given the success of these techniques inside the classroom, A.C.T. has decided to take some of our classes “off campus” with its Corporate Training Program. Gabriel and Kolodny have created class models that can be customized to serve a variety of businesses in San Francisco. Classes include Team Building and Collaboration, Storytelling and Presentational Skills, and Acting for the Executive Presence, which are available as half-day, full-day, and two-day sessions.

Gabriel hopes to bridge the gap between the tech sector and the arts by offering these classes off campus. He says, “Both tech professionals and theater professionals are interested in connectivity; it’s one aspect of our work that unites us. A.C.T. hopes to expand the very definition of community by bringing some of our best work right into the offices of Bay Area businesses.”
TAKING THEIR SEAT
STRAND DONORS JASMINE AND MICHAEL MALAGA

by Mindy Lechman

A.C.T. IS HONORED TO COMMEMORATE THE inaugural supporters of The Strand Theater by installing their names on seat plaques, as we know that these inscriptions will inspire theater-loving audiences for years to come.

Jasmine and Michael Malaga have been coming to performances at A.C.T. for the past two decades and became subscribers four years ago. Jasmine used to travel frequently to New York for business and always made time to see a play or two when there. “I’m impressed that the caliber of A.C.T.’s work rivals that of any I saw in Manhattan, even though San Francisco is a much smaller city,” she says.

The Malagas have especially enjoyed attending A.C.T. with their friends and sharing the magic of theater. “We set aside several magical evenings a year to invest in our friendships and share our passion for theater,” says Jasmine.

This year the Malagas welcomed the arrival of their daughter,
Charlotte, who they hope will share their love for the arts.
“We want to be part of supporting exceptional theater in San Francisco and to help ensure that institutions like A.C.T.
continue to be a part of our daughter’s life,” Jasmine explains.
“Since she was born the year The Strand opened, we thought it would be fitting to sponsor a seat in her name. We hope to introduce her to theater at A.C.T. as she grows up.”

The Malagas believe San Francisco needs to continue nurturing the arts and are excited that The Strand will revitalize a building that has been such a mainstay in the city’s cultural history. The Strand will also showcase the work of A.C.T.’s Master of Fine Arts Program and Young Conservatory students, house our expanding Education & Community Programs, and provide a venue for a wider range of A.C.T. productions.

Her play Kinship premiered at the Théâtre de Paris last October in a production starring Isabelle Adjani and Niels Schneider, and will be produced at the Williamstown Theater Festival this summer, starring Cynthia Nixon and directed by Jo Bonney. Waiting for the Flood has received workshops at A.C.T., New York Stage and Film, and Roundabout Theatre. Higher was developed at New York Stage and Film, won the 2011 Blanche and Irving Laurie Foundation Theatre Visions Fund Award, and received its world premiere in February 2012 in San Francisco. Luminescence Dating premiered in New York at The Ensemble Studio Theatre, was coproduced by A.C.T. and the Magic Theatre, and is published by Dramatists Play Service. The Colossus of Rhodes was workshopped at the O’Neill National Playwrights Conference, premiered at Lucille Lortel’s White Barn Theatre, and was produced at A.C.T. in 2003.

Before joining A.C.T., Perloff was artistic director of Classic Stage Company in New York, where she directed the world premiere of Ezra Pound’s Elektra, the American premiere of Pinter’s Mountain Language, and many classic works. Under Perloff’s leadership, CSC won numerous OBIE Awards, including the 1988 OBIE for artistic excellence. In 1993, she directed the world premiere of Steve Reich and Beryl Korot’s opera The Cave at the Vienna Festival and Brooklyn Academy of Music.

A recipient of France’s Chevalier de l’Ordre des Arts et des Lettres and the National Corporate Theatre Fund’s 2007 Artistic Achievement Award, Perloff received a B.A. Phi Beta Kappa in classics and comparative literature from Stanford University and was a Fulbright Fellow at Oxford. She was on the faculty of the Tisch School of the Arts at New York University for seven years, and teaches and directs in the A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program. Perloff is on the board of the Hermitage Artist Retreat in Sarasota, Florida, and is the proud mother of Lexie and Nicholas.
