Established in 1957, Dublin Theatre Festival is an annual event that brings artists from around the world to the heart of Dublin. Performances take place in venues and locations across the city and incorporate theater, music, dance, artist talks, and public discussion—making for an energizing and inspiring whirlwind theater package, just a quick ride from castles and the Irish countryside.

Seats for both tours are filling up fast! Reserve your place today: contact Helen Rigby, A.C.T. Associate Director of Development, Individual Giving, at hrigby@act-sf.org or 415.439.2469.
San Francisco's
THEATER COMPANY

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER, San Francisco's Tony Award–winning nonprofit theater, nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training, and an ongoing engagement with our community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Executive Director Ellen Richard, we embrace our responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent our relationship to the rich theatrical traditions and literatures that are our collective legacy, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. A commitment to the highest standards informs every aspect of our creative work. Founded by pioneer of the regional theater movement William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season in 1967. Since then, we’ve performed more than 350 productions to a combined audience of more than seven million people. We reach more than 250,000 people through our productions and programs every year.

The beautiful, historic Geary Theater—rising from the rubble of the catastrophic earthquake and fires of 1906 and immediately hailed as the “perfect playhouse”—has been our home since the beginning. When the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake ripped a gaping hole in the ceiling, destroying the proscenium arch and dumping tons of debris on the first six rows of orchestra seats, the San Francisco community rallied together to raise a record-breaking $30 million to rebuild it. The theater reopened in 1996 with a production of The Tempest directed by Perloff, who took over after A.C.T.’s second artistic director, gentleman artist Ed Hastings, retired in 1992.

Perloff’s 20-season tenure has been marked by groundbreaking productions of classical works and new translations creatively colliding with exceptional contemporary theater; cross-disciplinary performances and international collaborations; and “locavore” theater—theater made by, for, and about the San Francisco area. Her fierce commitment to audience engagement ushered in a new era of InterACT events and dramaturgical publications, inviting everyone to explore what goes on behind the scenes.

Perloff also put A.C.T.’s conservatory and educational programs at the center of our work. A.C.T.’s 45-year-old conservatory, led by Conservatory Director Melissa Smith, serves 3,000 students every year. Our three-year, fully accredited Master of Fine Arts Program has moved to the forefront of America’s actor training programs. Our M.F.A. Program students often grace our mainstage and perform around the Bay Area as alumni. Other programs include the world-famous Young Conservatory for students ages 8 to 19; Studio A.C.T. for adults; and the Summer Training Congress, an intensive program that attracts enthusiasts from around the world.

A.C.T. also brings the benefits of theater-based arts education to more than 9,000 Bay Area school students each year. Central to our ACTsmart education programs, run by Director of Education Elizabeth Brodersen, is the longstanding Student Matinee (SMAT) program, which has brought tens of thousands of young people to A.C.T. performances since 1968. We also provide touring Will on Wheels Shakespeare productions, teaching artist residencies, in-school workshops, and in-depth study materials to Bay Area schools and after-school programs.

With our increased presence in the Central Market neighborhood marked by the opening of The Costume Shop theater and the current renovation of The Strand Theater across from UN Plaza, A.C.T. is poised to continue its leadership role in securing the future of theater for San Francisco and the nation.

Dear Friends,

Eduardo De Filippo was the consummate man of the theater: a director, actor, technician, and writer who grew up in a theatrical family and truly had drama in his blood. Perhaps that’s why his work feels so consonant with A.C.T. As I walked into the studio for the first rehearsal of Napoli, I felt such a rush of family while looking at the many strands of A.C.T. life that were gathered together. In the spirit of De Filippo, we have brought together a multigenerational company of incredible actors, ranging from original A.C.T. core acting company members Marco Barricelli and Gregory Wallace to Canadian star Seana McKenna to Bay Area favorites to some of our most wonderful M.F.A. actors, in a production led by Associate Artistic Director Mark Rucker of a vivid new translation by our own director of new work, Beatrice Basso (in collaboration with Linda Alper). Napoli is a play deeply beloved in Italy (and especially in Naples) but rarely seen in the United States, perhaps because it truly takes a theatrical family to pull it off.

Following the galvanizing arguments of Major Barbara, Napoli is another look at the impact of money and war on the morality and survival of a family. Without judgment, De Filippo asks us to think about the lengths to which a mother and father will go to keep their children alive and fed in wartime—and what the price of endless compromise turns out to be. The act of translation is truly a rescue mission that can bring alive a play from a distant time or culture alive for a new audience. De Filippo is particularly challenging to translate because his Neapolitan dialect is so pungent and particular. There is a music to his language that needs to be carried forward and reimagined. For me, hearing this lovely new American translation is almost like hearing a new play, full of discoveries and life, but also remarkably true to its original source material. I hope the rich canvas of this bittersweet story will sweep you into its magical and surprising world as it did all of us when we first encountered the play.

Napoli continues the international journey we embarked upon this season, first with our Librarian who covered the world in search of himself in Underneath the Lintel, then with our Canadian partners exploring 1905 London in Major Barbara, and now in a crowded apartment in wartime Naples. Next, we’ll unravel the secrets behind the wicked Austrian novelette on which Venus in Fur is based, before traveling to South Africa for Peter Brook’s stunning adaptation of Can Themba’s The Suit, and culminating in a thrilling look at one of the great Chinese epics of all time, The Orphan of Zhao, starring BD Wong and with music by Stuck Elevator’s Byron Au Yong.

So much is happening in and around A.C.T. as we share this production with you. In January, the entire Geary Theater exploded with clowning, combat, and creative chaos as our M.F.A. actors took over the building for M.F.A. Variety, which performed to standing-room-only crowds in The Garret. Meanwhile, our new Strand Theater is under construction, and every week brings us closer to something I have longed for during my entire 20-year tenure at A.C.T.: an intimate house in which to take risks and invest in new artists and new audiences.

The Strand will be a hub for our education programs, a platform for our conservatory, and a gathering place for the Central Market neighborhood. This project has been the occasion for rich dialogue within A.C.T. and all around town as we explore the many ways our new building can serve the entire artistic community of the Bay Area, how we can share resources, how we can provide “next steps” for artists we want to hold on to here, and how we can partner with our neighbors in the tech arena. We plan to open The Strand in spring 2015, and we want all of you to be involved. Stay tuned for a major announcement about our opening plans and how you can participate in the Strand Campaign.

While we are looking toward the future, now is the moment to give you a sneak peak at the riches we have in store for you next season. Every once in a while it happens that the plays we are excited about seem to revolve around a constellation of specific themes. The plays we have lined up for next season are all about memory: how we attempt to recreate the past through dazzling fragments of what we remember; how storytelling is a constant retelling, reimagining, and misinterpreting of history; and how we as audience members participate in that recreation.

So it is perfect that we are opening our 2014–15 season with Old Hats, an explosive new work by two of the most brilliant clowns in the world, Bill Irwin and David Shiner, in collaboration with musical genius Nellie McKay. Ever since their landmark Fool Moon, Bill and David have wanted to create a piece about what happens to clowns when they get older. The hilarious and heartbreaking fruit of their quest is a show (originally developed at the Signature Theatre in New York) that takes them into cyberspace and beyond, but always returns them to the totally human anxieties over love and loss, aching bones, and the indelible memory of what they once were. With McKay’s wondrous songs interspersed throughout, Old Hats is a metaphysical eruption of hilarity and humanity by master artists working at the peak of their craft.

Another kind of memory game is happening in Colm Toibin’s fiercely lyrical Tony Award–nominated one-woman show Testament, which recounts in riveting detail Mary’s personal narrative of the last days in the life of her son, Jesus. Held under house arrest until she cooperates with the authorities, Toibin’s unforgettable Mary grieves for her child while questioning the motives of those who would deify him. How do legends form? Who has the right to rewrite history? Whose memory counts in the end? Toibin, a celebrated Irish novelist, has created in Mary a character of astonishing poignancy, wit, ferocity, and vulnerability—and legendary Canadian actress Seana McKenna (whom you are seeing today in Napoli! will bring her to blazing life on the Geary stage. With potent contemporary echoes of mothers around the world who have lost sons to the fervor of coercive movements, Testament asks us unsettling questions about faith, fanaticism, and family.

Like Toibin, playwright Anne Washburn asks big questions about the slippery nature of memory in Mr. Burns, her dystopian comedy about a group of post-apocalyptic survivors trying to recreate from memory the “Cape Feare” episode of The Simpsons. Washburn, a Bay Area native, has written an ingenious salute to the resilience of storytelling, asking us, “If you lost everything, what would it take to rebuild your culture?” A play that was hailed in New York for leaving audiences “dizzy with the scope and dazzle of its ideas,” Mr. Burns makes all of us responsible for the preservation of civilization as we watch a fragment of pop culture become the raft on which we float.

Memory also looms large in Tom Stoppard’s exquisite Indian Ink, which we are revisiting next season in collaboration with the Roundabout Theatre Company in New York, after our American premiere of the play 15 years ago. Of all of Stoppard’s plays, Indian Ink is perhaps his most romantic—and also most personal. Stoppard grew up in India during World War II, and out of his memories he has created a stunning time-travel play about the relationship between an English poet and an Indian painter in the 1920s, and how that relationship is discovered (and misinterpreted) years later by those who love them.

It is fortuitous that we will be presenting this magical play about poetry, passion, and missed opportunities in the same season as a musical that perfectly encapsulates those themes: Stephen Sondheim’s sumptuous A Little Night Music, which will be directed by Mark Lamos. Filled with Sondheim’s signature wit and some of his most gorgeous melodies (including the beloved and haunting treasure “Send in the Clowns”), this is a bittersweet tale of lost love, scandalous infidelity, and young passions that intertwine over a midsummer’s eve at a country home in 1900s Sweden. It will be a luscious way to usher in the summer.

That’s only the beginning! There’s another Geary play to come and also the opening production of The Strand Theater yet to be announced. We are in for a tremendously exciting time over the next 18 months, and we truly hope you will join us for all of it.

NAPOLI! is performed with one 15-minute intermission.
Italy did not come out of World War I well. The territorial gains the nation was granted at the Paris Peace Conference were paltry compared to the losses it had suffered battling Austria-Hungary. Meanwhile at home, its people were dealing with a cost of living that had risen 500 percent since 1914, a crushing national debt, out-of-control unemployment, and an endless succession of industrial, agricultural, and municipal strikes—and an ineffective government paralyzed by infighting and incapable of addressing these urgent problems. In an environment of national disillusionment, Benito Mussolini and his Fascist Party took power in 1922. “Everything that is now wrong will be well,” Il Duce (The Leader) promised as Italy’s intimidated king appointed him prime minister. With an aggressive energy that was infectious, Mussolini resuscitated the economy of his war-ravaged country by implementing a public-works agenda then unparalleled in Europe.

In Naples in particular, Mussolini improved port facilities and the railway network, built a new airport and subway system, and renovated important cultural institutions like the Teatro San Carlo. But while he allocated enormous sums of money to these impressive developments, he did little to improve less glamorous aspects of the city’s infrastructure—sewers, schools, housing—or the rampant poverty that had plagued the city for centuries. As it had done less than three decades earlier, Naples would again have to bear the burdens of war in an already weakened state.

Rationing Wartime Shortages
After a level of national economic stabilization had been achieved, Mussolini’s ambitions grew: he wanted an empire. He set his sights on Ethiopia, which he invaded in October 1935—a direct violation of the League of Nations Covenant by a member nation and effectively the first act of World War II. With Mussolini’s bold move, Der Führer invited Il Duce to Germany. Mussolini returned from this visit convinced that Hitler would be a powerful ally. In 1939, the countries signed the Pact of Steel, promising each other military assistance whenever requested.

Mussolini did not realize the scope of Hitler’s goals—or understand that militarily superior Germany did not need Italy to achieve them. Germany simply did not want Italy to get in the way.

Victory in Ethiopia had strained Italy’s resources, and the retaliatory sanctions imposed by the League of Nations had damaged the Italian economy. When Germany invaded Poland in 1940 and dragged Italy into confrontation with the Allied forces, Mussolini’s advisors warned him that in no way was the military prepared. But in a tragic miscalculation, Mussolini assured his council that the war would be over in mere months: “All I need is a few thousand dead so that I can sit at the peace conference as a belligerent.” For him, Germany’s war was a quick way for Italy to expand its empire.

The war was not a quick one, and to keep pace with Hitler to ensure the best possible postwar footing, Mussolini involved his underprepared, undersupplied military in one misguided confrontation after another. As demoralizing as these defeats were, Italians were consumed by more immediate concerns. Italy had to feed its own army while also trading food with Germany for the oil, gas, and coal it needed to fuel the war machine. Food quickly grew scarce because blockades interrupted importation from abroad and many farmers had been drafted. By 1942 wheat, fats, olive oil, eggs, fruits, and vegetables were hard to find in the cities and coffee was precious. Propaganda posters urged Italians: “Eat to live—don’t live to eat.” As they tightened their belts around their ever-shrinking waists, they dubbed the final notch “the Mussolini hole.” “As good as bread” replaced the saying “as good as gold.”

For those who could afford it, there was the black market, supplied by enterprising peasants who risked smuggling food into the cities. The profits were large, but so too were the penalties: profiteering was punished with a hefty fine and three years in prison. Meanwhile, high-ranking officials used their positions to leverage enormous wealth and power, which they flaunted by obtaining whatever food they desired. The public’s opinion of the Fascist Party grew cold, and with one fiasco after another, confidence in their once-beloved leader fell rapidly.

As it appeared increasingly likely that Mussolini would be ousted, Hitler prepared to invade Italy—not to protect his ally, but to use the country as a defensive barrier against an Allied invasion of occupied France. When the Allies took Sicily, Italians realized that they would be soon ruled either by the Germans or the British.

On July 25, 1943, the king of Italy removed Mussolini from power and Germany moved in from the north. Italy’s replacement government attempted to negotiate an alliance with the Allied forces, but Britain refused anything other than an unconditional surrender from its recent foe. By the time Italy conceded to these terms on September 8, Germany already had a foothold in its major cities, including Naples.

Three Years of Bombs

Between 1940 and 1943, Allied forces bombed Naples 105 times. It suffered more damage than any other Italian city. Before the United States entered the war in late 1941, Britain did not have enough planes or bombs to carry out a major air offensive on Italian soil. Aerial attacks, therefore, took a greater psychological than material toll, destroying houses and killing civilians, but leaving important factories untouched. The deadliest early raid Italy saw was launched against Naples on December 15, 1940: 80 civilians died and fires raged in the impoverished Spanish Quarter.

By the time Italy declared armistice with the Allies, more than 22,000 Neapolitans had been killed by air raids and countless more had been wounded. Upwards of 230,000 living quarters were destroyed or rendered uninhabitable. August 4, 1943, days after Mussolini had been deposed but a month before Italy officially surrendered, was the single most devastating day of bombing: during an hour and a half of continuous horror, 400 planes wreaked havoc on the city. As described in the Neapolitan newspaper Roma, “The Anglo-American airmen deliberately set out to launch a full-scale terrorist raid, raining bombs on every part of the city, sparing nothing: neither hospitals, monuments of art, historic villas, nor humble workers’ homes. Bombs of every size rained down everywhere.”

When Allied troops landed in Naples on October 1, 1943, they understood the full extent of the devastation that they had brought down on the ancient city. Allen Raymond, a war correspondent, catalogued the basic necessities that the population lacked: “There was no electric power, gas, sewage disposal, air-raid signals, telephones, telegraph, ambulance service, fire protection, postal service, streetcars, busses, taxis, or railways. Water was so scarce that people had no more than a quart a day, and that was carried by hand, for the entire water-supply system had been wrecked. . . . Food was practically unobtainable.”

Adding to the damage, the retreating Nazis systematically destroyed anything that could be of use to the Allies. They sank more than 130 ships to block the harbor and destroyed all the vehicles they could not take with them. They dynamited buildings to block roads. They destroyed cranes and cargo equipment, pipelines and power cables, electricity plants and transportation facilities, warehouses and radio stations; they destroyed the aqueduct that brought water into Naples and the sewers that took waste away. They also burned historical archives, opened the doors to all 12 prisons, and set mines under key buildings and gathering places, timed to explode weeks after they left.

The Rise of the Black Market

Despite the brevity of their time in Naples, the Germans left a horrible impression on the population. Upon arrival, they had declared martial law: “Every citizen who behaves in a calm and disciplined manner will be protected. Anyone who acts openly or clandestinely against the German armed forces will be crushed by force. For every German soldier killed or wounded revenge will be taken a hundredfold.” After two weeks of brutal occupation, Naples rose up in rebellion; four days of mostly uncoordinated guerrilla attacks—the famous Quattro giornate di Napoli—contributed to the German withdrawal.

When the Allies arrived, Neapolitans viewed them as liberators, not conquerors. Alan Mooreland, an English writer attached to the King’s Dragoons Guards, wrote at the time:

I had had the notion that the people would be hostile, or resentful, or perhaps reserved. I had expected that they would indicate in some way the feelings they had had as enemies in the past three years. But there was no question of war or enmity here. Hunger governed all. . . . The animal struggle for existence governed everything. Food. That was the only thing that mattered. Food for the children. Food for yourself. Food at the cost of any debasement and depravity.

Unfortunately, the Allies had not arrived as liberators. They were an army pursuing an enemy, and they could not spare enough shipping to feed the Italian population adequately while supplying their ground troops.

To get basic necessities, Neapolitans would do anything. Many left their homes at daybreak to walk hours to fields that still had edible plants, but these were quickly stripped. There were fish in the sea, but boats were not yet allowed out on the water, so children combed the sea wall for snails to boil into broth. Local dogs and cats went missing.

Members of the middle class sold off what possessions they had, but the poor did not have any possessions to sell.
Women sold their bodies for tins of food—by the British Bureau of Psychological Warfare’s estimate, almost one-third of the “nubile female population” entered prostitution. Some parents pimped their young daughters so the girls would not starve. Young ladies of marriageable age attached themselves to Allied soldiers, who promised them a portion of their rations and some money.

Children and able-bodied men unable to find work resorted to thievery. The black market that had begun with the food shortages became a major industry under the unwieldy administration of the Allied Military Government (AMG) and with the influx of Allied supplies. “Nothing has been too large or too small—from telegraph poles to phials of penicillin—to escape the Neapolitan kleptomania,” British Intelligence officer Norman Lewis noted in 1944:

A week or two ago an orchestra playing at the San Carlo to an audience largely clothed in Allied hospital blankets, returned from a five-minute interval to find all its instruments missing. A theoretically priceless collection of Roman cameos was abstracted from the museum and replaced by modern imitations, the thief only learning—so the reports go—when he came to dispose of his booty that the originals themselves were counterfeit. Now the statues are disappearing from the public squares, and one cemetery has lost most of its tombstones. Even the manhole covers have been found to have marketable value, so that suddenly these too have all gone, and everywhere there are holes in the road.

Rather than condemning these literal roadblocks to the restoration of the city, newspapers took delight in recounting daring acts of piracy.

One-third of all imported Allied supplies and equipment disappeared into the black market, sold openly in every roadside stall. Bosses operated under the protection of high-placed AMG officials. They were untouchable and grew rich, and those who had previously risked dabbling in illegal trade under the Fascist police state were ahead of the game. On the other hand, if a poor man was caught in possession of a few cartons of American cigarettes, he was imprisoned for three months and fined 30,000 lire. It was as it had always been in Naples: the rich and well-connected were protected while the poor were oppressed. Something new could have been built out of the rubble. Instead, as a matter of military expediency, the Allies reestablished the Neapolitan political elite as quickly as they could.

Throughout much of 1944, local industry remained at a standstill and much of the population remained unemployed. Only after Germany surrendered in 1945 did the Allies show an interest in Italy’s economic recovery—and only then because they feared communism would otherwise take root. In the decades that followed, Naples’s economic recovery was long, slow, and uneven.

The Indomitable Neapolitan Character

“The Neapolitans, like their volcanic country, are never in a state of repose,” a visiting English aristocrat observed in 1823. “Their gaiety has in it something reckless and fierce; as if the burning lava of their craters had a magnetic influence over their temperaments.” And why not? They exist in the shadow of the world’s most majestic memento mori. In March 1944, Mount Vesuvius erupted and blanketed the city in ash. “You might have survived the war, but I’m still here,” it reminded locals.

In Naples life is lived on noisy, narrow streets paved with lava stone as humanity overflows from overcrowded housing. Neapolitans, especially poorer ones, tend to live out their days in the district where they are born. Different blocks are separate villages, home to generations of the same family. From its occupiers throughout history, Neapolitans adopted what features and traditions they liked best, but saved their allegiance for their own people. Omertà, a code of camaraderie, dictates they will always close ranks against outsiders.

Three weeks before the 1944 eruption, the cantastorie (storytellers) took up their places along the Villa Nazionale, a strip of municipal gardens between the city of Naples and the bay, to tell the old tales. Norman Lewis wrote:

For ten centuries the invading armies have come and gone. Foreign kings have ruled in Naples, and enslaved its people. Revolutions have been drowned in blood. But nothing of this has made the slightest impression on the imagination or memory of the common man, nor called for the addition of anything to the storyteller’s repertoire. This is all that the little audience that gathers as he begins to intone his narrative in the Villa Nazionale still wants to hear about. The Swabians, the Aragonese, the Bourbons, and now the Germans have been instantly forgotten. Charlemagne and Roland live on.

EDUARDO DE FILIPPO
BY SHANNON STOCKWELL

Eduardo De Filippo was born in Naples in 1900, the illegitimate son of the actor, playwright, and director Eduardo Scarpetta and his wife’s niece, Luisa De Filippo. Under his father’s tutelage, the young De Filippo grew up in the theater, first appearing onstage at the age of four. When he was only six years old, he became an apprentice with his father’s theater company, which performed mostly commedia dell’arte–inspired farces. His theatrical education was interrupted when he joined the Italian army from 1920 to 1922, during which time he still managed to organize shows for the troops.

It was for one of these army shows that De Filippo wrote his first play, Farmacia de turno (Pharmacist on Duty), a farcical one-act about a cuckolded pharmacist. After leaving the army, he continued writing and performing, often in collaboration with his siblings, Peppino and Titina. Together they formed La Compagnia del Teatro Umoristico i De Filippo (The Humoristic Theater Company of the De Filippos) in 1931, opening with Eduardo’s play Natale a casa Capiello (Christmas at the Capiellos). The play was a wild success: contracted for nine days of performance, it was extended to nine months.

The De Filippos’ company toured Italy for the next 12 years. Dangerously, Eduardo wrote characters who spoke in the Neapolitan dialect, which was outlawed under Italy’s Fascist regime—all plays were required to be written in Standard Italian. Due to the company’s popularity, however, the infraction was overlooked, and it was allowed to perform mostly unhindered by censors.

Following World War II, Eduardo’s career truly began to flourish. Peppino was a great comedic actor given to performing farces, but Eduardo, deeply affected by the war, felt an increasing desire to write plays of moral and social substance. The brothers parted ways in 1945. Eduardo and Titina formed El Teatro di Eduardo.

In rapid succession, Eduardo wrote three of his most famous plays. First was Napoli milionaria! (1945; The Millionaire of Naples), which he felt represented his shift in focus: “Here in Naples, it seems to me, the Second World War made 100 years pass overnight. And if that much time has gone by, then I need to write about different things. . . . I feel this need to change, to meet the challenge to today; if I don’t, I’ll feel I’ve become useless.”

Immediately following the success of Napoli milionaria!, he wrote Questi fantasmi! (1946; These Ghosts!), about a man who mistakes his wife’s lover for a ghost, and Filumena Marturano (1946; Filumena Marturano), about a former prostitute who fakes her own imminent death to trick her lover into marriage. While still employing humor, these plays explored themes of war, morality, and reality versus illusion. The latter theme inspired his next works: Le voci di dentro (1948; Inner Voices), in which a man confuses his nightmares with reality, and La grande magia (1949; Grand Magic), about a magician who tricks a jealous husband into questioning every aspect of reality.

De Filippo used the confusion between reality and illusion for comedic bits, but the comedy was accompanied by tragedy: the characters are only seduced by illusion when something prevents them from facing reality. Critic Eric Bentley observed, “Eduardo had insisted that illusions were needed because the truth was more than we could stand.”

De Filippo’s next major work, Sabato, domenica e lunedì (1959; Saturday, Sunday, Monday), is his most fully developed exploration of the Italian family and received a tremendous response when it was performed in England in the 1970s. In the 1960s, De Filippo was committed to producing plays about social injustice: “In general,” he said, “if an idea does not have social meaning or social application, I’m not interested in developing it.” His major works from this period, Il sindaco del Rione Sanità (1960; The Local Authority) and L’arte della commedia (1964; The Art of Comedy), are representative of his deepening exploration of justice and morality. Il sindaco del Rione Sanità, about a sort of de facto mayor of a quarter in Naples and the struggles of his impoverished constituents, explores these themes in a literal way; L’arte della commedia is a study on the social role of theater in society.

De Filippo is considered one of the most important Italian playwrights, second only to Luigi Pirandello. He was made a Senator for Life in 1981, and 30,000 people are said to have attended his funeral in 1984. Despite his popularity in his home country, De Filippo’s plays have never gained widespread popularity in the United States. Most critics attribute this to the difficulty of translating De Filippo’s Italian into English. As a playwright and an actor, he revolutionized Italian stage language, and one of the most distinctive elements of De Filippo’s body of work is his unique approach to the Neapolitan dialect. American playwright Thornton Wilder called him “forever unEnglishable,” but if the two successful runs of their translations of De Filippo’s work (Saturday, Sunday, Monday and Napoli) are an indication, translators Linda Alper and Beatrice Basso have found an approach that works.
MARCO BARRICELLI* (Gennaro), former artistic director of Shakespeare Santa Cruz, has been an actor, director, and educator since 1982. Now in its 42nd season, the STC attracts a diverse group of serious acting students and includes amongst its alumni Teri Hatcher, Camryn Manheim, Don Johnson, Jennifer Grey, and Omar Metwally.

Five-Week Intensive: Core Skills
June 16–July 18, 2014
Develop a broad range of acting skills in classes taught by A.C.T.’s resident artists, conservatory faculty, and distinguished guest artists. Training is centered on core skills classes, including acting, speech and voice, text, movement, improvisation, and audition technique. The five-week session will culminate in a performance project.

Two-Week Intensive: Core Skills
July 21–August 1, 2014
Focus on the specific craft of performing Shakespeare and other classical texts. Training includes classical acting, speaking classical text, physicalizing classical text, and soliloquy.

Since 2007, the second-year actors of our Master of Fine Arts Program have brought inventive adaptations of Shakespeare classics (directed and driven by conservatory faculty members) to schools around the Bay Area through our annual Will on Wheels tour. Shortened for length and designed to be portable and to fit “stages” of various types and sizes (sometimes simply a taped-off classroom floor), these wonderful shows have introduced thousands of young people—many who would otherwise have no opportunity to attend a performance—to the magic of live theater. Immediately following each performance, the actors join the audience to field any questions these curious minds might have, not only about what they’ve just seen onstage but also about the actors’ decision to pursue theater as a profession.

Since the establishment of our Education Department in 2011, we have added to the number of schools we reach with Will on Wheels every year. Last spring’s production of Twelfth Night, directed by conservatory faculty member Stephen Buescher, visited 17 schools and community spaces, up from 10 the previous year, some located as far as an hour outside of San Francisco. This season we received such an outpouring of interest in our 90-minute production of Shakespeare’s most famous love story, Romeo and Juliet, we’ve added a third week to the tour. Romeo and Juliet will be directed by A.C.T. M.F.A. Program Head of Movement Stephen Buescher and tour March 3–21.

To extend our reach, we have also added a second production to the tour: a two-actor, 60-minute adaptation of As You Like It, directed by Associate Artistic Director Mark Rucker and designed with middle school students in mind.

Will on Wheels is just one of the ways our M.F.A. Program actors-in-training are having an impact on our community. Over the past two years, an inspiring relationship has emerged between the high school youth engaged through our ACTsmart education programs and our M.F.A. actors, who have been eager to share their developing skills with the younger students. A.C.T. currently runs two intensive residency programs—one with Downtown High School and one with Ida B. Wells High School, both continuation high schools in San Francisco—and has a growing number of community partnerships with after-school arts programs, including ongoing classes at the Tenderloin Boys and Girls Club and Central Market’s Bessie Carmichael/Filipino Education Center K–8 School. Dovetailing with these programs, our M.F.A. actors have designed their own workshops to engage the younger students in improvisation, writing, and monologue performance.

“Leading weekly improv workshops for the Downtown High School students has proved to be one of the most fruitful aspects of my experience at A.C.T.,” says second-year M.F.A. actor Dominique Salerno. “Sharing my love of this art form with these students and watching their growth both as individuals and as a team has reinvigorated my passion for theater—and has strengthened my belief that artistic expression is integral to education. There is something in the sharing nature of teaching that really feeds me as an artist.”

The organic symbioses between our ACTsmart programs and our Conservatory have encouraged us to think more deeply about the relationship between the actors we train and our community. As arts education funding has dried up, schools have fewer and fewer teachers trained to engage students in creative pursuits. At the same time, most artists have very little training or experience in teaching, particularly when it takes place in traditionally challenged communities. We realized we are uniquely placed to help bridge that gap—by training artists to serve as effective arts educators and engaged community members while staying true to their artistic roots.
“The relationship that has developed between the students in our education programs and our M.F.A. actors is rich, unexpected, and inspiring,” says Director of Education Elizabeth Brodersen. “The high school students, who are discovering their own voices in learning to write and perform their own stories, or for the first time seeing Shakespeare’s language come alive onstage, find validation in seeing artists just a few years older engaged in theater as a serious, professional pursuit. By creating opportunities for emerging professionals to engage deeply with young learners, we are building community while helping to secure the future of the art form.”

Inspired by the guiding principles of El Sistema, the socially motivated education program developed in Venezuela that has brought classical music instruction to millions of children around the globe since its founding in 1979, we have begun to explore the concept of the “citizen artist” and its relevance to actor training at A.C.T. We understand the term citizen artist to encompass the holistic development of the professional artist, involving dedication to craft, entrepreneurial spirit, and commitment to society. Our ultimate goal is to graduate A.C.T. citizen artists who can teach, mentor, and effect social change through the art of live performance.

To this end, for the 2013–14 academic year, we have laid out the beginnings of a teaching artistry/community engagement component in the M.F.A. Program curriculum, which involves all students in some aspect of A.C.T.’s education and community outreach programming, while offering them training in the fundamental skills necessary to become an effective teaching artist. One example: in conjunction with the Will on Wheels tour this year, the second-year students will each participate in ACTsmart pre- and postshow workshops at the schools and community spaces where they will be performing, accompanied and preceded by a training session with an experienced A.C.T. teaching artist.

This exciting development comes at a critical juncture for A.C.T., as we prepare to move into our new venue, the repurposed Strand Theater in Central Market, a transitional neighborhood adjacent to the historically blighted Tenderloin area, where we will begin programming in 2015. The Strand will provide a hub for A.C.T.’s education efforts as well as a showcase for A.C.T.’s M.F.A. actors in performance—and could be the glue that brings these two initiatives together under one roof and with common artistic purpose.

“When an M.F.A. actor speaks of how meaningful teaching is to their training experience—how he learned as much as he taught—it’s incredibly gratifying,” says Conservatory Director Melissa Smith. “Teaching gets the actor to hold himself to a higher standard in rehearsal and performance, to bring himself to his work more honestly. In the words of one M.F.A. actor, ‘Teaching showed me how to check my ego at the door.’ I believe this new component of our curriculum is ensuring that we graduate actors who are not only skillful interpreters and generators of dramatic art, but who are also generous and creative human beings, committed to making the world a better to place to live in through the practice of that art.”

“We ARE ALL ACTORS: BEING A CITIZEN IS NOT LIVING IN SOCIETY, IT IS CHANGING IT.”

AUGUSTO BOAL
GETTING BEHIND THE GALA

OUR GALA CO-CHAIRS WANT YOU TO SUPPORT OUR STUDENTS!

by Luz Perez

Just ask Gala co-chairs Nancy Sawyer Hasson and Fred M. Levin what excites them most about being part of the A.C.T family (apart from the extraordinary work onstage), and they’ll say, “A.C.T.’s students!” Every year more than 2,500 young artists benefit from A.C.T.’s acclaimed actor training programs. From our Young Conservatory and Studio A.C.T. to our world-renowned Master of Fine Arts Program, A.C.T. is energizing and advancing the future of performance in America. In addition, A.C.T.’s ACTsmart arts education programs bring the transformative power of live theater and dramatic learning to more than 9,000 schoolchildren and teachers each season.

This year, Hasson and Levin offer their combined talents and financial support as co-chairs of A.C.T.’s 2014 Season Gala: Fleishhacker, Magnin, and Swig, A.C.T.’s Mad Mad Men: Honoring A.C.T.’s Founding Fathers. Taking place on Sunday, May 18, 2014, the Gala directly benefits our actor training and arts education programs, which are so vital to the future of American theater.

“It wasn’t until we had school-aged children that I realized what the C in A.C.T. actually stood for,” Hasson admits. “My children joined A.C.T.’s Young Conservatory summer program and I learned more about not only what happens both on and off stage, but what happens in the years leading up to anyone being on the stage in the first place. The YC introduced us to the M.F.A. Program student-teachers and actors, and over the years we have gotten to know more and more of these talented young actors-in-training. They are some of the most wonderfully gifted and dedicated artists I have met, but like any student, many of these students are struggling to fund their education. I am delighted to be able to support this most vibrant part of A.C.T. and the future of live theater.”

An A.C.T. subscriber and donor since 1992, Hasson and her husband, A.C.T. Board President Kirke Hasson, are proud to support the art created under A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff and the education of artists young and old by Conservatory Director Melissa Smith, Young Conservatory Director Craig Slaight, and Director of Education Elizabeth Brodersen. A supporter of theater and champion of San Francisco, Hasson finds co-chairing the gala yet another way to give back to our city’s vibrant arts community.

“It’s an honor to co-chair this specific Gala,” says Levin. “As a fourth-generation San Franciscan, A.C.T. and its founding fathers and their families have always been a part of my life. It gives me immense pleasure to call their children my friends and to know that, together, we all strongly support A.C.T.’s extraordinary work.”

Levin together with his wife, A.C.T. Board Chair Nancy Livingston, are stewards of the Shenson Foundation and lifelong theatergoers who have subscribed to A.C.T. for almost 30 years; Levin even attended A.C.T. performances as a student. Levin and Livingston share a passion for the performing and visual arts and focus their philanthropy on supporting pre-professionals. A former importer from the Pacific Rim, Levin currently serves on the governing boards of the San Francisco Symphony, the Asian Art Museum, and the San Francisco Film Society (which his father founded) and is a past chair of San Francisco Performances.

A.C.T.’s founding artistic director, William Ball (left), and Mortimer Fleishhacker, one of the San Francisco civic leaders who secured A.C.T.’s residency at The Geary Theater in 1967, put up the sign announcing A.C.T.’s new home. At the 74 U.S. theaters registered with the League of Resident Theatres, 137 people currently hold top leadership positions (artistic, executive, or managing directors). Only 34 of them are women. Women have never held more than 27 percent of leadership positions in nonprofit theater. Why? In a field in which women purchase more than 65 percent of theater tickets, what are the obstacles to female leadership? While a great deal of research is being done into gender inequality in the fields of science and technology, very little has been studied about female leadership in the theater. To fill this void and answer these questions, A.C.T. has partnered with the Wellesley Centers for Women to initiate a study of our own. A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Executive Director Ellen Richard sat down with Laura Penn, executive director of the Stage Directors and Choreographers Society, to discuss the motivations behind the Women’s Leadership Project and their hopes for future generations of theater makers.

Laura Penn: Why did you decide to take the lead in this research?

Ellen Richard: The short answer is that diversity is a huge topic for the field, and we wanted to make sure that gender was fully considered in that conversation and, more specifically, gender within leadership; so we thought, “Well, we’re leaders; let’s run with it.”

WHAT HAVE THE PRELIMINARY QUESTIONS AND CONVERSATIONS AROUND THE SUBJECT BEEN?

Carey Perloff: It started with Ellen and I looking at each other and thinking, “How did the two of us end up in leadership positions, and where are our peers?” Then I started really thinking about where my women director colleagues from 20 years ago are right now. I wondered why more of them aren’t running theaters. We’re interested in how people get to certain leadership positions and what the structural impediments are for women. So, we started to theorize about those obstacles, and we realized that A.C.T. has a legacy of female board leadership. It had never occurred to me that this was essential to my being hired, but I don’t think it was coincidental. When Ellen was hired, the search committee chair was a woman. And we had a lot of women candidates. Maybe that was also because I was interested in working with a woman.

Thinking about all of this, we started to speculate on what the obstacles to leadership were. We circled around four possible obstacles for women: lack of mentorship for potential leaders; the issue of child care taking working mothers off the leadership track; women not getting through the filter of the talent search firms, which are run by men; and existing theater leaders not having a particular interest in hiring women, for whatever reason.
Richard: Yes, looking at the current leadership at any given theater, that artistic director or executive director will have a preference about their colleagues. Does that person want to work with a woman?

Perloff: It’s a hard thing to shift because leadership—of boards and staff—tends to replicate itself.

You invite your friends?

Perloff: Yes, so the discrimination is not out of malice, but because we invite people we know. So, that is an issue.

Richard: There is another issue, which is how women present themselves in interviews. For instance, Carey just characterized our success at A.C.T. as “lucky.” I read something in Sheryl Sandberg’s book [Lean In: Women, Work and the Will to Lead], which just struck me when Carey said she was lucky. When women are asked, “How did you get your job?” they say, “Well, I worked hard and I was lucky.” That’s how I characterized my trajectory for years. Sandberg says that this is what many successful women say. Men never say, “I am lucky.” They say, “I’m smart and I deserve this job,” not, “I was lucky.” So, part of this issue is how women position themselves.

The other thing that I read in Sheryl Sandberg’s book is that women are judged based on their potential. That is huge. That is the most frightening thing to me, and it goes with another interesting observation, which is when men have 60 percent of the qualifications for a given job, they go ahead and apply, thinking, “I’m 60 percent; I can do the job.” And women with 60 percent of the qualifications don’t apply; they say, “Forty percent of that job description is out of my wheelhouse.” We need to make women realize that, particularly for artistic directors, nobody has all the qualifications, because there’s no training for theater leadership. So, you’re never going to have 100 percent of the skills, but you’re going to have 60 percent. Be an expert in some of the job and know how to hire people who are experts in other parts.

So, based on your own experiences and some of the conversations coming out of the corporate world, you’ve begun to identify some of the obstacles for women to get to leadership positions?

Perloff: Yes, but because we couldn’t ascertain the real answer to this obstacle question, we thought we should have a more rigorous study. You can’t take action steps until you have some data and understand what the causes are.

And this need for a more rigorous, objective study led you to the Wellesley Centers for Women? Tell me how that partnership came to be.

Perloff: I began researching gender-based think tanks. I wrote to a number of schools and immediately got a response from Wellesley, from a remarkable woman called Sumru Erkut, who was fascinated by this proposal, because she had studied gender equity in other fields, where the trajectory of the leadership is much more clearly articulated.

What Sumru finds particularly fascinating and challenging about theater is that there is no clear path to leadership. Executive directors are plucked from many different backgrounds. They can come out of development, general management, or production. Artistic direction has traditionally come out of directing, but now there are artistic directors who aren’t directors, so how does that process work? It’s all relational, which makes it really mysterious and difficult.

Can you talk a little about the study itself? What information are you gathering?

Richard: There will be a lot of information gathered about women who are candidates for leadership positions, analyzing their backgrounds in aggregate form. Where did they go to school, what kind of work have they done, where have they worked? The researchers will speak to search committees and various leaders that make hiring decisions.

So, based on the fact that you are focusing on real candidates for leadership, what I’m hearing is that you think this is a “hitting the glass ceiling” issue rather than a “no talent in the pipeline” problem?
WHO WILL BE CONDUCTING THE STUDY?

The Wellesley Centers for Women (WCW) at Wellesley College is one of the largest gender-focused research-and-action organizations in the world, working for justice, peace, and well-being for women and girls, families and communities, in all their diversity at home and around the globe. Since 1974, its mission is to achieve this vision through research, theory, and action that puts the perspectives and concerns of women and girls at the center. WCW is home to more than 50 individual projects that focus on educational equity, gender violence, women’s leadership, childcare, and justice. Issues of diversity and equity are central across all the work as are the experiences and perspectives of women from a variety of backgrounds and cultures.

Sumru Erkut, Ph.D., will be the principal investigator of the research endeavor for the Women’s Leadership Project. She is an associate director and senior research scientist at WCW, where her work focuses on gender equity and racial/ethnic diversity in leadership and development across the life course. She has a doctorate in social psychology from Harvard University. She has analyzed data from interviews with diverse women leaders, which resulted in the report Inside Women’s Leadership. She has collaborated in a study on barriers to women and minorities’ upward mobility for the U.S. Department of Labor’s Glass Ceiling Commission; a gender equity survey at a large medical center; and a study of equitable inclusion for women and minorities in high-technology sales. Her most recent work on equity in leadership is a study of women on corporate boards of directors; her findings resulted in the widespread acceptance that three or more women on a corporate board constitute a critical mass for influencing board dynamics.

Perloff: Anecdotally, it seems clear that there is a rich array of female candidates out there, so it does seem to be a glass ceiling issue. In my informal dialogue with women who are leadership candidates, certain things have emerged over and over again. I’ll tell you three quick ones: First, women making the short list for artistic director jobs are being interviewed by phone, while male candidates get flown in for face-to-face interviews. It’s not enough to be on the list; you have to actually be in the room. And it just seems to be okay that women are second-class citizens in this respect.

The second thing was the number of women who told me the first question that came up in interviews was, “How would you relocate your family?” No one asks men this question, even when they have children.

And the third is the number of times that women are told they don’t have the administrative experience, particularly in fundraising and board management. My hunch is that actually many of the men who are hired don’t have fundraising experience either, but we just assume that men are more comfortable in front of groups of people asking for money.

Some case studies are really telling, and I want those to emerge in the study as well, but one of the important aspects of this study is that it will go beyond anecdotal research.

Richard: We want this study to be taken seriously and not have a taint of bias. Participants in the study will only talk to these researchers at Wellesley, who can really describe the protocols for the research. Wellesley will protect the anonymity of all the sources.

Perloff: What has been incredible is that, having just talked about the study publicly, it hit a nerve. I’ve gotten so many emails from women, particularly young women saying, “Please do this study, please let me know how I can help, and please fill me in when you get the results.” From students, from young directors, from all kinds of people. Really, there’s obviously a great need and interest in the field and it’s funny that, before we found Wellesley, most funders didn’t perceive this as a pressing issue.

Richard: What we’ve heard unfortunately is, “It’s so much better in theater than in the corporate world. What is the problem?” I’ve heard that way too many times.

Perloff: A panelist for one of the grants we wrote said, “Twenty-five percent of the leadership is female. What’s the problem? Why isn’t that enough?” It’s not enough, because this is not just about social justice or morality or doing the right thing. It’s actually about how we make the industry a better, more enduring, more inclusive, and more flexible field. By not being inclusive, we’re losing extraordinary talent.

ACT-SFO.ORG / 415.749.2228
CAREY PERLOFF (A.C.T. Artistic Director) recently celebrated her 20th year as artistic director of A.C.T., where she most recently directed Underneath the Lintel, Arcadia, Elektra (coproduced by the Getty Villa in Malibu), Endgame and Play, Scorched, The Homecoming, Tosca Cafe (cocreated with choreographer Val Caniparoli and recently toured Canada), and Racine’s Phèdre in a coproduction with the Stratford Festival. Known for directing innovative productions of classics and championing new writing for the theater, Perloff has also directed for A.C.T. José Rivera’s Boleros for the Disencharnted; the world premieres of Philip Kan Gotanda’s After the War (A.C.T. commission) and her own adaptation (with Paul Walsh) of A Christmas Carol; the American premieres of Tom Stoppard’s The Invention of Love and Indian Ink and Harold Pinter’s Celebration; A.C.T.-commissioned translations/adaptations of Hecuba, The Misanthrope, Enrico IV, Mary Stuart, Uncle Vanya, A Mother, and The Voysey Inheritance (adapted by David Mamet); the world premiere of Leslie Ayvazian’s Singer’s Boy; and major revivals of ‘Tis Pity She’s a Whore, The Government Inspector, Happy End (including a critically acclaimed cast album recording), A Doll’s House, Waiting for Godot, The Three Sisters, The Threepenny Opera, Old Times, The Rose Tattoo, Antigone, Creditors, The Room, Home, The Tempest, and Stoppard’s Rock ’n’ Roll, Travesties, The Real Thing, and Night and Day. Perloff’s work for A.C.T. also includes Marie Ndiaye’s Hilda, the world premieres of Marc Blitzstein’s No for an Answer and David Lang/Mac Wellman’s The Difficulty of Crossing a Field, and the West Coast premiere of her own play The Colossus of Rhodes (Susan Smith Blackburn Award finalist).

Her play Luminescence Dating premiered in New York at The Ensemble Studio Theatre, was coproduced by A.C.T. and Magic Theatre, and is published by Dramatists Play Service. Kinship was developed at the Perry-Mansfield New Play Festival and at New York Stage and Film (2013); Waiting for the Flood has received workshops at A.C.T., New York Stage & Film, and Roundabout Theatre Company. Higher was developed at New York Stage and Film and presented at San Francisco’s Contemporary Jewish Museum in 2010; it won the 2011 Blanche and Irving Laurie Foundation Theatre Visions Fund Award and received its world premiere in February 2012 in San Francisco. Her one-act The Morning After was a finalist for the Heideman Award at Actors Theatre of Louisville. Perloff has collaborated as a director on new plays by many notable writers, including Gotanda, Nilo Cruz, Timberlake Wertenbaker and Robert O’Hara.

Before joining A.C.T., Perloff was artistic director of Classic Stage Company in New York, where she directed the world premiere of Ezra Pound’s Elektra, the American premiere of Pinter’s Mountain Language, and many classic works. Under Perloff’s leadership, CSC won numerous OBIE Awards, including the 1988 OBIE for artistic excellence. In 1993, she directed the world premiere of Steve Reich and Beryl Korot’s opera The Cave at the Vienna Festival and Brooklyn Academy of Music.

A recipient of France’s Chevalier de l’Ordre des Arts et des Lettres and the National Arts and Letters Achievement Award, Perloff received a B.A. Phi Beta Kappa in classics and comparative literature from Stanford University and was a Fulbright Fellow at Oxford. She was on the faculty of the Tisch School of the Arts at New York University for seven years and teaches and directs in the A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program. Perloff is on the board of the Hermitage Artist Retreat in Sarasota, Florida, and is the proud mother of Lexie and Nicholas.

ELLEN RICHARD (Executive Director) joined A.C.T. as executive director in August 2010. She served previously as executive director of off Broadway’s nonprofit Second Stage Theatre in New York City. During her tenure at Second Stage, she was responsible for the purchase contract of the Helen Hayes Theatre and substantial growth in subscription income and growth in individual giving. Under Richard’s leadership, Second Stage provided the initial home for the Broadway productions Everyday Rapture, Next to Normal, and The Little Dog Laughed.

From 1983 to 2005, Richard enjoyed a rich and varied career with Roundabout Theatre Company. By the time she departed as managing director, Roundabout had been transformed from a small nonprofit on the verge of bankruptcy into one of the country’s largest and most successful theater companies of its kind. Richard is the recipient of six Tony Awards as producer, for Roundabout productions of Cabaret (1998), A View from the Bridge (1998), Side Man (1999), Nine (2003), Assassins (2004), and Glengarry Glen Ross (2005). Producer of more than 125 shows at Roundabout, she had direct supervision of all general and production management, marketing, and financial aspects of the theater’s operations. She conceptualized and oversaw the redesign of the three permanent Roundabout stages—Studio 54, the American Airlines Theatre, and the Harold and Miriam Steinberg Center for Theatre. She directed the location search for Cabaret and supervised the creation of that production’s environmental Kit Kat Klub.

Prior to her tenure at Roundabout, Richard served as business manager of Westport Country Playhouse, theater manager for Stamford Center for the Arts, and business manager for Atlas Scenic Studio. She began her career working as a stagehand, sound designer, and scenic artist assistant.

MELISSA SMITH (Conservatory Director, Head of Acting) has served as Conservatory director and head of acting in the Master of Fine Arts Program at A.C.T. since 1995. During that time, she has overseen the expansion of the M.F.A. Program from a two- to a three-year course of study and the further integration of the M.F.A. Program faculty and student body with A.C.T.’s artistic wing; she has also taught and directed in the M.F.A. Program, Summer Training Congress, and Studio A.C.T. Prior to assuming leadership of the Conservatory, Smith was the director of theater and dance at Princeton University, where she taught introductory, intermediate, and advanced acting. She has taught acting classes to students of all ages at various colleges, high schools, and studios around the continental United States, at the Mid-Pacific Institute in Hawaii, New York University’s La Pietra campus in Florence, and the Teatro di Pisa in San Miniato, Italy. She is featured in Acting Teachers of America: A Vital Tradition. Also a professional actor, she has performed regionally at the Hangar Theatre, A.C.T., California Shakespeare Theater, and Berkeley Repertory Theatre; in New York at Primary Stages and Soho Rep; and in England at the Barbican Theater (London) and Birmingham Repertory Theatre. Smith holds a B.A. from Yale College and an M.F.A. in acting from Yale School of Drama.

Full-time students, educators, and administrators save up to 50% off season subscriptions with valid ID. Visit act-sf.org/edu for details. Seniors (65+) save $40 on 8 plays, $35 on 7 plays, $30 on 6 plays, $25 on 5 plays, and $20 on 4 plays.

Single Ticket Discounts
Joining our eClub is the best—and sometimes only—way to find out about special ticket offers. Visit act-sf.org/eclub for details. Find us on Facebook and Twitter for other great deals.

Beginning two hours before curtain, a limited number of discounted tickets are available to seniors (65+), educators, administrators, and full-time students. For matinee performances, all seats are just $20 for seniors (65+). Valid ID required—limit one ticket per ID. Not valid for Premiere Orchestra seating. All rush tickets are subject to availability.

Group Discounts
Groups of 15 or more save up to 50%! For more information call 415.439.2473.

AT THE THEATER
A.C.T.’s Geary Theater is located at 415 Geary Street. The lobby opens one hour before curtain. Bar service and refreshments are available one hour before curtain. The theater opens 30 minutes before curtain.

A.C.T. Merchandise
Copies of Words on Plays, A.C.T.’s in-depth performance guide, are on sale in the main lobby, at the theater bars, at the box office, and online.

Refreshments
Full bar service, sweets, and savory items are available one hour before the performance in Fred’s Columbia Room on the lower level and the Sky Bar on the third level. You can avoid the long lines at intermission by preordering food and beverages in the lower- and third-level bars. Bar drinks are now permitted in the theater.

Cell Phones!
If you carry a pager, beeper, cell phone, or watch with alarm, please make sure that it is set to the “off” position while you are in the theater. Text messaging during the performance is very disruptive and not allowed.

Perfumes
The chemicals found in perfumes, colognes, and scented after-shave lotions, even in small amounts, can cause severe physical reactions in some individuals. As a courtesy to fellow patrons, please avoid the use of these products when you attend the theater.

Emergency Telephone
Leave your seat location with those who may need to reach you and have them call 415.439.2317 in an emergency.

Latecomers
A.C.T. performances begin on time. Latecomers will be seated before the first intermission only if there is an appropriate interval.

Listening Systems
Headsets designed to provide clear, amplified sound anywhere in the auditorium are available free of charge in the lobby before performances. Please turn off your hearing aid when using an A.C.T. headset, as it will react to the sound system and make a disruptive noise.

Photographs and Recordings of A.C.T. performances are strictly forbidden.

Restrooms
are located in Fred’s Columbia Room on the lower lobby level, the Balcony Lobby, and the Garret on the uppermost lobby level.

Wheelchair Seating
is located in Fred’s Columbia Room on the lower lobby level, the Balcony Lobby, and the Garret on the uppermost lobby level.

A.C.T. is pleased to announce that an Automatic External Defibrillator (AED) is now available on site.

Lost and Found
If you’ve misplaced an item while you’re still at the theater, please look for it at our merchandise stand in the lobby. Any items found by ushers or other patrons will be taken there. If you’ve already left the theater, please call 415.439.2471 and we’ll be happy to check our lost and found for you. Please be prepared to provide us with the date you attended the performance and your seat location.
