I love to ski, so I was devastated when I found out I needed both knees replaced. But the physicians and staff at California Pacific Medical Center, part of the Sutter Health network, were the best. Through consultation, surgery, recovery and follow-up, they were there for me the whole way. Now I have full range of motion in both knees, and I can’t wait until the snow flies. Shel, CPMC patient.

San Francisco’s Theater Company

American Conservatory Theater Founding General Director William Ball, at the forefront of the regional theater movement, wanted to create a company outside New York that would have a significant national impact while providing an alternative to commercial theater. After a group of San Francisco civic leaders attended A.C.T.’s West Coast debut at Stanford University in 1966, they invited Ball and his company to settle in San Francisco, which was without a resident theater company. A.C.T. has been dedicated to bringing the power of live theater to San Francisco audiences since the company’s first rousing performance of Ball’s Tartuffe in the Geary Theater (now called the American Conservatory Theater) on January 21, 1967.

A.C.T.’s majestic stage opened January 10, 1910, rising from the rubble of the catastrophic earthquake and fires of 1906. It was immediately hailed as one of the grandest playhouses in the United States. In 1975 the Geary was awarded a place on the U.S. Department of the Interior’s National Register of Historic Places and named a landmark of the State of California and the City and County of San Francisco. In 1989 the Loma Prieta earthquake ripped a gaping hole in the ceiling, destroying the proscenium arch and dumping tons of equipment and debris on the first six rows of orchestra seats. Nevertheless, A.C.T.’s second artistic director, Edward Hastings (who succeeded Ball in 1986), never considered canceling the season. For the next six years, A.C.T. performed in seven different venues around the city. “We had to encourage people to come back to this devastated, ravished, magical place called San Francisco,” remembered Hastings. “And what they found in the theater were a lot of other people who were shook up. So there we were, all together in a theater, helping bring the city back together again.”

With the support of a community that contributed to a record-breaking $28.5 million capital campaign, the Geary reopened in 1996 with a production of The Tempest directed by A.C.T.’s current artistic director, Carey Perloff, who took over after Hastings retired in 1992. Committed to proving that theater is still “a place where language is kept alive and functional and muscular and breathing,” Perloff reconfirmed A.C.T.’s mission to expose San Francisco to exceptional works from across our rich theatrical tradition. She reintroduced the core acting company (which had been disbanded decades earlier) to keep top-quality local actors working, and she committed herself to “locavore” theater—theater made by, for, and about the community that supports it—with San Francisco–centered productions like After the War, The Tosca Project, and the much-beloved 2011 hit Armistead Maupin’s Tales of the City.

Since the company’s founding, A.C.T. has infused the Bay Area with some of the best young acting talent in the nation. The company first began training outside actors in the summer of 1967, and by 1969, the conservatory had expanded to include a year-long course of study, which has since evolved into the three-year, fully accredited, top-ranked Master of Fine Arts Program. M.F.A Program students often grace the mainstage and return to perform at A.C.T. as alumni; they are also regulars on stages around the Bay Area and beyond. Other programs include the Young Conservatory, which offers training and performance opportunities for students ages 8 to 19; Studio A.C.T., which offers acting classes for adults; and the Summer Training Congress, which attracts students from around the world.

With the arrival of distinguished Executive Director Ellen Richard, the recent conclusion of a long-range strategic planning process, the introduction of an education department, and the opening of a new performance space (The Costume Shop, located in the Mid-Market neighborhood across from UN Plaza), A.C.T. is poised to continue its leadership role in securing the future of theater for San Francisco—and the nation.

From the Artistic Director

Dear Friends,

Big openhearted holiday greetings to every one of you! Whether you’re here for the very first time, or because A.C.T.’s A Christmas Carol is an indispensable part of your annual solstice celebration, we’re thrilled and honored to have you with us.

This version of Dickens’s beautiful story, which Paul Walsh and I created seven seasons ago, grew out of the very depths of A.C.T.’s being. We are, uniquely, an intergenerational theater in which children and adults, professionals and students, masters and emerging artists train, create, and play together on a regular basis. Because we house one of the most renowned M.F.A. programs in America, and because we are blessed with a truly one-of-a-kind Young Conservatory in which eight-to-nineteen-year-olds study and perform and grow, we made sure that A.C.T.’s A Christmas Carol would feature an extraordinary range of artists of all ages, collaborating together on this exquisite tale of redemption and transformation.

This year, our Carol is, as always, blessed by the presence of some of the Bay Area’s most beloved veteran actors—including Jim Carpenter, our inimitable Scrooge—familiar to A.C.T. audiences from numerous productions on our magnificent stage. It also features 26 children from our Young Conservatory, the entire M.F.A. Program class of 2012, and members of our core acting company. This is an incredible gift: a chance for the larger A.C.T. family to work together and for you, our Carol audience, to see the breadth of A.C.T.’s commitment to artists of all ages.

Paul Walsh and I wanted this Carol to salute the power of the imagination to transform even the crustiest of souls. Dickens’s novella is exceptionally theatrical: much of it is written in dialogue, and it centers around the striking presence of four ghosts who perform a series of “interventions” on Scrooge until his heart is reawakened and he begins his life anew. Now more than ever, the themes of Dickens’s story of greed and renewal resonate, as protesters around the world wrestle with the gap between the haves and the have-nots and we struggle to hold on to our empathy and imagination in an increasingly divisive world.

It is worth remembering that Dickens trusted the artistic imagination to lift us out of the darkness and set us on a more inspiring path. It is also worth noting, for those of you who are here with children, that it has been proved again and again that when young people are exposed to the transformative power of live theater, their scholastic work and world view open up in wonderful and surprising ways. It is our hope at A.C.T. to become even more deeply engaged in arts education for young people throughout the Bay Area. Meanwhile, we hope you feel that you’ve given yourselves a gift by being here, and we wish you a fulfilling and empathetic year ahead. I invite you to return this winter and spring to experience the artists and artistry of A.C.T.’s extraordinary 2011–12 season.

Yours,

Carey Perloff, Artistic Director

Dickens’s Uncompromising Vision

BY MICHAEL PALLER

When Charles Dickens was 12, his father’s tenuous hold on the middle class collapsed in a heap of mounting debt. John Dickens was incarcerated in the Marshalsea debtors’ prison, where he was joined a few weeks later by his wife and four of their six children, as was customary at the time. Charles, a sensitive boy who loved school and reading, was put to work alongside other poor children in a Thames-side warehouse that manufactured and sold boot-blackening. For ten hours a day, six days a week, he affixed labels onto jars, for a time doing so in a prominent storefront window, for passersby to see. The work wasn’t difficult, but the bewildered boy found himself suddenly alone in a world without comfort or security. “I certainly had no other assistance whatever,” he later wrote, “from Monday morning until Saturday night. No advice, no counsel, no encouragement, no consolation, no support, from any one that I can call to mind.”

Charles lived by himself in a run-down rooming house in Camden Town, then a slum in northwest London. At night he played on coal barges moored in the Thames or wandered the streets. He spent a small portion of his wages (which amounted to less than a dollar a week) on food—sometimes just a small penny loaf of bread—and gave the rest to his father. Gazing into the warm light of shop windows and taverns, he observed every sort of character, high and low. So began his intimate, lifelong acquaintance with the meanest quarters and poorest people of London. On weekends, he walked four miles from his lodgings to visit his family in the Marshalsea, where he listened with fascination to the stories his mother told him about the other prison inmates. It seemed he could not get enough of them.

After about three months, an inheritance allowed John Dickens to pay his debts and he and his family were released from prison. Charles worked for another month before his father, having seen him on display in the store window, removed him from the warehouse and sent him back to school. Although his time in the warehouse lasted at most five months, the sudden descent into the desperate world of London’s poor left a lifelong mark.

Beginning at 15, Charles held a series of jobs that kept him in close contact with that world. The first, as an office boy in a law firm, introduced him to the workings of the legal system and its effects on middle-class and poor individuals. He saw how it might work for people on occasion, but that more often it benefited the lawyers, who never seemed to lack for clients. His opinion of the law did not improve when he became a court reporter at an obscure institution, the Consistory Court of Doctors’ Commons. Here, marriage licenses and bills of divorce were granted, wills entered into probate, and, curiously, disputes occurring on church property were adjudicated. At 20, he became a journalist, covering Parliament. He observed the operation of a government controlled by aristocrats, industrialists, and wealthy merchants that blocked every significant reform or attempt to aid the poor introduced by a handful of brave politicians. He was present, for example, at the passage of the Poor Law of 1834, which made poverty in England tantamount to a crime and which Dickens found especially outrageous.

“ARE THE WORKHOUSES STILL IN OPERATION?”

The Poor Law of 1834 was Parliament’s response to an alarming rise in the cost of caring for the poor, the population of which had risen steeply due to the Industrial Revolution and legislation such as the Corn Laws, which since Napoleonic times had kept the price of corn artificially high for the benefit of the wealthy farming interests (mostly aristocrats who owned large estates). This forced the poor and lower-middle-class families to spend the bulk of their income on food, so that, in addition to creating near-starvation conditions for the poor, the Corn Laws also led to a depressed market for manufactured goods such as clothes. As a result, many people who worked in factories lost their jobs, widening the cycle of despair and poverty.

Until the Poor Law took effect, most of the destitute had been cared for with money raised by a tax on their neighbor parishioners. The parish (a unit of both political and religious life) distributed money or food to the poor, who were allowed to remain in their homes and retain at least some measure of dignity. Scholar Marjie Bloy writes that while the previous poor laws, which had been on the books since 1601, were inconsistently administered and variously interpreted, parishes recognized that caring for their poor was a public responsibility and that “everyone knew everyone else and it was in the interests of all that the poor were looked after.”

The Poor Law did nothing to reduce the numbers of poor people, but by all accounts it increased their misery. They lost their homes, and their families were broken up and sent to live in workhouses. Once there they were called inmates and wore uniforms; indeed, there was little to distinguish their lot from that of prisoners. Men and women, none of whom were incarcerated for committing a crime, broke rocks, crushed bones, dug holes that were then filled up and dug again, or painted and repainted walls, over and over. Conditions inside were purposefully made grimmer than life outside; as a result, the cost of caring for the poor fell by 36 percent, which was the exact intention of the bill’s authors.

WEALTH AND AVARICE

Once Dickens saw the legal system and government at work, it did not take him long to find his true vocation. By the time he took a seat in the Visitors’ Gallery of the House of Parliament, he was turning the scenes he had witnessed in the law offices, courts, and legislative chambers into fiction. Two years later he was famous, thanks to a collection of short pieces called Sketches by Boz. One described a visit to the Court of Doctors’ Commons, where a “hard-featured old man” with a “deeply wrinkled face,” whose every look and gesture “told of wealth, and penury, and avarice,” was busily planning to rob a poor man of a long-awaited inheritance.

As he looked with a penetrating eye at a society where the wealthiest grew richer at the expense of the poor, Dickens found plenty of material to fuel his growing outrage. For instance: from the beginning of the Industrial Revolution, children had been part of the workforce. As early as 1802, Parliament attempted to regulate working conditions for children, with little success. That year, legislators did manage to pass a law limiting child labor in factories and cotton mills to twelve hours per day. In 1831, a push was made, largely by religious leaders, to limit child labor to ten hours a day. A bill was introduced in Parliament; in all likelihood Dickens was in the gallery to report on it when it failed.

Progress of a modest sort was made with the Factory Act of 1834, which regulated the textile industry. It permitted children between 11 and 18 to work up to twelve hours a day; those between 9 and 10 were permitted to work eight hours a day. Children under 9 were no longer permitted to work at all. The law, however, didn’t apply to other industries, including those where conditions were among the worst, including iron and coal mines, gas works, nail factories, and chimney sweeping. In all of these enterprises, it wasn’t unusual for children to start work at the age of 5 and, if they survived into adulthood, many were left with crippling injuries. They worked sixteen-hour days under atrocious conditions, as did their parents. A government report on child labor in mines concluded that a child’s chance of survival in the mines was equal to that of a soldier on a battlefield.

THE WORK OF HIS IMAGINATION

By 1840, three years before Dickens wrote A Christmas Carol, only about 20 percent of children in London had any schooling, and education for all children regardless of class became another issue about which Dickens developed passionate feelings. He founded and edited two weekly newspapers in which he wrote as often about the need for universal education as he did for sanitation laws, labor laws, and prison reform. To those who opposed putting the power of education in the hands of the less fortunate he wrote, “Reflect whether ignorance be not power, and a very dreadful power . . . for every kind of wrong and evil.”
As potent as his speeches and journalism were, it is his fiction, of course, that made Dickens famous, and where he created the images that caused the world to take closer notice of those who lived their lives in the shadows of neglect. In Oliver Twist, he attacked the Poor Law and the workhouses; in Nicholas Nickleby, he exposed the exploitation of children by ruthless schoolmasters more interested in profit than education. The Marshalsea became the primary setting and symbol of Little Dorrit, and John Dickens the model for William Dorrit. The sage words of advice that the elder Dickens gave his son while in prison become Wilkins Micawber’s in David Copperfield.”Annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure nineteen nineteen and six, result happiness. Annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure twenty pounds ought and six, result misery.” David himself is removed from school and put to work in the factory of his stepfather. Camden Town became the Micawbers’ residence and home to the Cratchit family. The grim conditions of the workhouse, blithely accepted by the rich and middle classes, caused a furious Dickens to write these lines for Jacob Marley, in response to Scrooge’s, “You were always a good man of business, Jacob”:

Business! Mankind was my business. The common welfare was my business; charity, mercy, forbearance, and benevolence, were, all, my business. The dealings of my trade were but a drop of water in the comprehensive ocean of my business!

In A Christmas Carol, too, Dickens created a memorable image of children who lived without hope, food, or education. The Ghost of Christmas Present shows Scrooge two desperate, starving children. He tells Scrooge, “This boy is Ignorance. This girl is Want. Beware of them both, and all their kind, but most of all beware this boy, for on his brow is written ‘Doom.’”

In the years between the passage of the Poor Law and the writing of A Christmas Carol, Dickens came to believe that the privileges and priorities of the wealthy men who controlled Parliament would obstruct all attempts to solve the national problems of poverty, poor working conditions, and substandard education. This only made his vision of British society more uncompromising. As the years passed, his work evolved from melodramas of good characters beset by evil ones to complex tapestries of good people victimized by a vast system of greed and corruption that infected every institution of society. His masterpiece, Bleak House, reached back to his earliest professional days to depict the legal system as a practically living thing, drawing blood and life from the poor unfortunates who were swallowed up in its great digestive system.

In one sense, Dickens never fully recovered from the trauma of his youth; he could never bring himself to tell his wife and children the story of his months in the warehouse. In a larger sense, however, he used those events to find a meaning for his life. Through 15 novels and several stories, including A Christmas Carol, the work of his imagination was an attempt to understand a world in which debtors’ prisons and workhouses could exist, in which neglected and uneducated children were considered an acceptable price for the comfort of the well-off. He found a purpose for his life through a public spirit forged from private pain, giving voice to those whom others ignored or could not hear, especially children. “I will pursue cruelty and oppression, the enemies of all God’s creatures of all codes and creeds, so long as I have the energy of thought and the power of giving it utterance,” he wrote. The journey of Charles Dickens’s life was from concern for self to dedication to others—just as it is for Ebenezer Scrooge.
Some people fantasize about running away to join the circus; Lorenzo Pisoni was born and raised in one. And not just any circus—Pisoni spent his formative years as the youngest member of San Francisco’s beloved Pickle Family Circus, cofounded in 1974 by his mother and father, Peggy Snider and Larry Pisoni. In January, A.C.T. audiences will get a tantalizing peek at behind-the-big-top life when Lorenzo brings his family-friendly show, Humor Abuse (cocreated with college friend and longtime collaborator Erica Schmidt), to his hometown. With touching reminiscences and hilarious virtuoso clowning, Pisoni offers an insightful and wildly entertaining look at his childhood—and his coming of age as an artist.

“Humor Abuse is about growing up in the circus and having a clown for a father,” Pisoni says. “But it’s mostly about a relationship between a child and a parent—a parent that the child doesn’t know very well.” He continues, “I’ve always wanted to do this show in San Francisco. The Pickle Family Circus was always so familial, and now this show has taken on some of those same qualities. In coming to A.C.T., I get to be part of bringing this show back to so many people for whom my parents’ circus was a big part of their lives.”

Unlike many stage memoirs, Humor Abuse is filled with intensely physical staging that balances Pisoni’s poignant memories with the daring acrobatic and vaudevillian feats that shaped his childhood. He opens a window onto his relationship with his father, while showing off many of the tricks he learned at his knee (and in his stage trunk)—proving his prowess in juggling, backflips, and beyond.

Pisoni developed the show with Schmidt over several years, beginning with workshop productions on the East Coast that led to the show’s world premiere at Manhattan Theatre Club in 2009. That production amassed accolades from both audiences and critics—the New York Times called Pisoni’s performance “breathtaking”—and won Drama Desk, OBIE, and Outer Critics Circle awards, among others.

A dynamic and versatile performer whose credits span 17th-century English classics (All’s Well That Ends Well and Measure for Measure at The Public Theater’s Shakespeare in the Park and The Gmeaster at A.C.T.), contemporary drama (Broadway’s Equus opposite Daniel Radcliffe, of Harry Potter fame), film and television, and, of course, circus work, Pisoni channels all of his skills and experience into Humor Abuse to take audiences on a full-throttle journey into his past.

“The ride that this play has been has taught me a great deal,” Pisoni says. “I can’t really think of anything better—to have successes and failures, and now to bring the show to an apex at the American Conservatory Theater is a wonderful story unto itself.

The Costume Shop Opens in Mid-Market

In October, A.C.T.’s beautiful and versatile new performance venue—The Costume Shop—opened in the heart of the rapidly developing and artistically vibrant Mid-Market neighborhood during the second annual 24 Days of Central Market Arts festival. “The launch of the space has been a huge success for A.C.T.,” says A.C.T. General Manager Don-Scott Cooper. “We’ve wanted for years to have a stronger presence in the Mid-Market neighborhood, and to create a storefront theater space that allows us to be a part of that community will pay back in dividends for our artists and conservatory students. I was especially proud that the Created Movement Project was part of 24 Days of Central Market Arts, putting us side by side with all the amazing arts organizations that call this burgeoning neighborhood their home.”

Erika Chong Shuch’s Created Movement Project was an event of beginnings: a devised work derived from the hopes, fears, talents, and insecurities of the performers, the inauguration of the space featured ten Master of Fine Arts Program first-years in their first performance of their first public production as a class. “It’s exciting,” says Conservatory Producer Dick Daley, “Now they’ll get to grow along with this new space throughout the remainder of their three years here. Being a part of 24 Days of Central Market Arts not only presented our new space to the local arts organizations and the community itself, but these students were also introduced to a number of artists and the neighborhood of which they are now a part.”

The Costume Shop’s second show of the season showcases the voices of the M.F.A. Program class of 2013 in A Musical Revue, a lively evening of musical entertainment, directed by Travis Greisler, who was the assistant director on Armistead Maupin’s Tales of the City, with musical direction by Robert Rutt, running December 8-10, 2011. An Educational Collaboration: A.C.T. and DHS Partner for San Francisco Youth

This season A.C.T. has for the first time teamed up with a local public high school for a dramatic season-long collaboration. Last fall, San Francisco’s Downtown Continuation High School (DHS) launched the new Acting for Critical Thought project, designed to engage students academically and artistically through the study of theater, movement, and playwriting. While A.C.T. has provided low-cost and free educational programming to Bay Area students for years through our Student Matinee and ArtReach programs, this type of ongoing in-depth residency is an exciting opportunity for A.C.T.’s newly formed education department—led by Director of Education Elizabeth Brodersen—to help make a profound difference in the lives of San Francisco youth.

Located on Potrero Hill, DHS is a project-based public school dedicated to serving San Francisco teenagers—most from the Bayview/Hunters Point, Excelsior, and Mission neighborhoods—who have not experienced success in traditional comprehensive high school systems. DHS represents a second chance for these students to succeed and, often, their last chance to graduate from high school. In order to earn credits towards their diplomas, students self-select thematic semester-long projects, led by teacher teams and characterized by interdisciplinary activities and related field experiences.

DHS teachers Eunice Nuval and Safiya Martinez developed the Acting for Critical Thought project to use theater as a lens through which to study issues of race and gender. In addition to reading relevant literature, studying social systems of oppression and identity, and using movement to explore the science of the human body, students are required to write and perform their own monologues and ten-minute plays. Tutors from San Francisco’s Mission-based 826 Valencia literacy initiative work with the students on their writing, which will be performed for the DHS community in A.C.T.’s Hastings Studio Theater in December and May and will eventually be published in a book produced by 826 Valencia.

Each week Nuval and Martinez bring the group of 37 students to A.C.T.’s classroom studios for a master class led by A.C.T. core acting company member, Master of Fine Arts Program graduate, and passionate and dedicated teaching artist Nick Gabriel. Gabriel covers a range of topics in each workshop—from theater vocabulary and improv to text analysis and truthful character representation. He also focuses students’ attention and engages them in discussion about A.C.T. mainstage and M.F.A. Program productions, which the group attends for free.

“‎I am constantly inspired by my students’ courage,” says Gabriel, who became an actor in part because of his early exposure to theater arts through outreach programs like A.C.T.’s. “They write about very personal experiences and allow other students to read and perform their plays. It is deeply moving to observe how compassionately they undertake the enormous responsibility of interpreting their classmates’ work.”

“Nick is dynamic and enthusiastic about his craft, and, most importantly, he truly challenges our students to do their best,” says Nuval. “Working with A.C.T. has been an integral part of our students’ success: our students’ commitment to the creative process and achieving their academic goals is reinforced by the high expectations from A.C.T. and our project curriculum. We are extremely fortunate to have such an opportunity to work with professionals in our community who are genuinely committed to public education and the arts.”

The fall session of A.C.T.’s collaboration with DHS was made possible by a generous contribution from A.C.T. subscriber and donor Linda Kurtz.

Alumni Spotlight on the Young Conservatory

Under the leadership of Director Craig Slaight, A.C.T.’s Young Conservatory has trained some of the country’s brightest young stars over the last two decades. Performers between the ages of 8 and 19 engage in exciting and challenging training and perform on all of A.C.T.’s stages in works ranging from cabarets to commissioned plays written specifically for young performers to A Christmas Carol, in which they work alongside A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program students and professional actors. Below we highlight six amazing YC graduates.

After graduating from the YC, Beth Behrs attended The UCLA School of Theatre, Film, and Television and appeared on NCIS: Los Angeles and Castle and in a few independent films before landing a costarring role in 2 Broke Girls. The show premiered this fall on CBS to 19.4 million viewers—the largest viewership for a fall comedy premiere since September 2001.

YC alumnus Darren Criss made his television debut in 2009 on Eastwick and appeared on Cold Case, but he is best known for his role as Blaine on the Emmy Award-winning series Glee. Criss’s breakout performance of Katy Perry’s “Teenage Dream” in his first episode set a milestone for the show, debuting at #1 on Billboard and selling more than 200,000 tracks in its first week. In 2012, Criss will join the Broadway cast of How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying and appear in the feature film Imogene (with A.C.T. alums Annette Bening and Christopher Fitzgerald).

Angela Lin returns to Broadway with David Henry Hwang’s Chinglish. She previously appeared in the Broadway productions of Coram Boy and Top Girls. Off Broadway she has performed in Jordan Harrison’s Futura with the OBIE Award-winning National Asian American Theatre Company, Ching Chong Chinaman at Pan Asian Repertory Theatre, and Sake with the Haiku Geisha at Gotham Stage Company. Lin also has numerous regional theater, film, and television roles to her credit.

Julia Mattison is making her Broadway debut in Godspell. While a student in the YC, she traveled to London’s National Theatre with Slaight and playwright Horton Foote in A Young Lady of Property. Since then, she has become a successful comedian and singer/songwriter.

After stints on the national tours of The Lion King and Les Misérables, Adam Jacobs made his Broadway debut in Les Mis’s 2006 revival. Jacobs then toured with Mamma Mia!, and in 2011 he originated the title role of Disney’s stage adaptation of Aladdin. He recently returned to Broadway to play Simba in The Lion King.

Chelsea Peretti has written for The Sarah Silverman Program and is currently a writer on the Emmy-nominated comedy Parks and Recreation. She has also appeared on Louie, Last Call with Carson Daly, and as a correspondent on Lopez Tonight. She is a regular on truTV’s The Smoking Gun Presents: World’s Dumbest.

For more than 40 years, the Bay Area’s young performers have been coming to A.C.T. for actor training that is both fun and formative. Since Director Craig Slaight took over the Young Conservatory (YC) in 1988, the program has grown to offer four sessions a year, four intensives each summer, and the opportunity to participate in four productions and three cabaret ensembles every season. Last summer alone, the YC trained 573 students; currently there are 210 students enrolled in class and 26 working alongside professional Bay Area actors and A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program actors-in-training in A Christmas Carol.

Like A.C.T. itself, the YC is a local institution with an international reputation. There is hardly a conservatory or undergraduate acting program in the country that YC alumni have not attended, and many have gone on to successful careers in theater, film, and television (see page 23).

The YC’s sophisticated programming is structured around the interests and needs of students of varying levels. There are introductory courses for those who are trying out acting for the first time. Others are aimed at students who have had prior theater experience and want to take their participation to the next level by working on their technique. There are also tracks for advanced students (the “die-hards,” Slaight calls them): these include master classes and, the ultimate lesson, public performances. For the truly serious actors, Slaight began offering Preparing for University and Conservatory Training (now called, simply, the “Senior Seminar”), which helps high-school seniors determine which, if any, B.F.A. in acting program is right for them.

“I designed the curriculum so that students can drop in and get a taste or can have an extended journey like Darren Criss,” Slaight explains. “Darren came in at age eight to explore acting as he was exploring music, but he ended up staying all the way through his senior year of high school, took the Senior Seminar, and went to the University of Michigan for acting.”

Criss (famous for playing Blaine on the hit television show Glee), like countless other YC students, performed in A.C.T.’s mainstage production of A Christmas Carol. Public performance is a key component of training in the YC, and intergenerational projects, like Carol and last summer’s revival of Korczak’s Children, a coproduction of the YC and the M.F.A. Program, are particularly rewarding. Slaight believes that the handing down of knowledge from actor to actor is an essential way his students learn. That’s why when he directed Carol in 2002 he established a formal mentorship program for M.F.A. and YC students. “When the YC acts have somebody looking out for them in rehearsal and performance, they can ask questions without feeling embarrassed,” he explains.

Before Carol rehearsals begin with the full cast each November, the M.F.A. and YC actors come together for a week

A.C.T. has been like a second family to me. There is a strong sense of comfort and support that allows all students to thrive and follow their goals. The Young Conservatory not only teaches students to express their creativity and talents, but also treats each student as a professional. I can’t imagine what my life would be like now if I hadn’t been involved with A.C.T. I have learned about relationships, passion, and a great amount about myself through taking classes and interacting with others in the YC, and I formed wonderful and lasting friendships along the way.

Julia Mattison (currently on Broadway in Godspell)

The first time I met Craig, he gave me a copy of American Theatre magazine with the play Ballad of Yachiyo printed inside and introduced me to playwrights like Philip Kan Gotanda and David Henry Hwang. It was a really important moment for me, because it was the first time I realized that Asian Americans have a voice and a place in American theater. Now David Henry Hwang is my friend, and I feel so blessed to be in his play Chinglish. It’s really coming full circle for me, and the YC was the beginning of it all.

Angela Lin (currently on Broadway in Chinglish)
of classes, where they discuss the world of Dickens’s play and begin to learn the period movement and voice technique required for the show, as well as the etiquette they will need to know when they step into what is, for many, their first professional rehearsal process. Deep bonds are formed between the older and younger performers. “It’s a once-in-a-lifetime experience for the kids and for the M.F.A. students,” says Slaight. “I know it pays off onstage. But I also think it pays off in their lives, in discovering the humaness of creating art in a place that’s very different from most theaters.”

Interacting with the YC is also beneficial for the graduate students. Rebekah Brockman, one of two M.F.A. Program students who acted in Korczak’s Children alongside 25 YC students, remembers, “Because the kids didn’t hold anything back, it made me less confined in my choices as an actor. I felt like I had a lot of freedom to play around with them. But it also made me check myself to make sure I was leading well by example.”

For years, new plays that have come out of the YC’s New Plays Program have been filling the neglected literary niche of dramatic work that views the world through the eyes of young people. Recently the YC workshopped Brad Slaight’s new play Copies, a “drama-comedy” about clones of wealthy children, which will open in March 2012.

Over the past decade, Slaight has also created a string of musicals for young performers. In 2006 he wrote Across the Universe, a libretto that incorporates songs by Lennon and McCartney; it proved to be the best-attended YC show to date and will receive a revival next June. Last season’s hit Homefront, a musical about Midwestern teenagers combating xenophobia during World War I, was a milestone for the New Plays Program as the first time the YC commissioned a composer to write original songs and lyrics.

While Slaight is interested in plays and musicals written specifically for young actors, he does not shy away from the classics. Earlier this fall, middle-school students tackled A Midsummer Night’s Dream, and last month high-school students performed the Greek tragedy Antigone. The accessible stories of both plays made them ideal introductions to the heightened language of classical theater.

This fall also saw the first YC Cabaret Ensemble production of the season, Paul, Joni, Carole, and James, in which high-school singers performed the music of Paul Simon, Joni Mitchell, Carole King, and James Taylor. Performing for a ticketed audience in the Garret of the American Conservatory Theater, the Cabaret Ensemble—along with the YC’s Musical Ensemble and Junior Cabaret Ensemble—teaches young performers to act truthfully and grow characters through song.

“W. C. Fields said, ‘Never act with dogs or children,’” Slaight chuckles. “I don’t think he would have had a good time at A.C.T. We celebrate the child in all of us here all the time.”

Next winter and spring will bring more cabaret performances, as well as productions of Copies and Across the Universe. The YC’s winter session (January 17–March 17) is enrolling now, followed by the spring session (March 20–May 12). Information about YC class schedules, auditions, and productions can be found online at act-sf.org yc.

The Young Conservatory is the absolute best place for any hopeful young artist. It instilled in me a sense of excitement and confidence and gave me the tools that I would go on to use in developing my professional career. I will forever be indebted to A.C.T. for the leaps it has allowed me to take as an actor, artist, and citizen of the greater world.

Darren Criss (currently on television in Glee)

I remember the YC as a focused and special place where I was taken seriously and challenged—an invaluable experience for any young, creative person.

A.C.T.’s Corporate Partners make extraordinary investments to bring dynamic, transformational theatrical experiences to the people of the San Francisco Bay Area. A.C.T. is honored to have the longstanding support of Pacific Gas and Electric Company (PG&E), both as a Lead Sponsor of the 2011-12 Theater in Schools Program and the Producing Sponsor of this year’s production of A Christmas Carol.

PG&E’s sponsorship helps make A Christmas Carol the most affordable holiday performance event offered by any major performing arts organization in the San Francisco Bay Area. Each year A Christmas Carol plays to a total audience of nearly 30,000. Thanks to the generosity of leading corporate sponsors like PG&E, A.C.T. is able to provide discounted tickets to a broad range of organizations focused on underserved communities. This year, more than 1,500 families and school groups will attend the production at little or no cost.

PG&E strives to power strong communities throughout Northern and Central California. Over the last decade, it has given nearly $40 million to youth educational initiatives by supporting innovative programs that provide students and teachers with opportunities to learn and by making productions like A Christmas Carol accessible to all.

Ezra Garrett, Vice President of Community Relations and Executive Director of the PG&E Corporation Foundation, talks about what it means to be an A.C.T. Corporate Partner:

Over the past six years, we’ve built upon our history of support for the work of A.C.T. through our expanded sponsorship of A Christmas Carol, a popular holiday tradition here in San Francisco. A.C.T. has been, and continues to be, a tremendous partner in connecting underserved schools and communities in the Bay Area with meaningful ways to engage with the arts and with each other. We wish them great success this holiday season and in the new year. Happy Holidays!

For information about becoming a Corporate Partner of A.C.T. please contact Associate Director of Development for Institutional Giving Stephanie Mazow at 415.439.2434 or smazow@act-sf.org.
CAREY PERLOFF
(Artistic Director) is celebrating her 20th season as artistic director of A.C.T., where she most recently directed The Homecoming, TheYSac Project (co-created with choreographer Val Caniparoli and currently touring Canada), and Racine’s Phèdre. Known for directing innovative productions of classics and championing new writing for the theater, Perloff has also directed for A.C.T. José River’s Boleros for the Disenchanted, the world premières of Philip Kan Gotanda’s After the War (A.C.T. commission) and her own adaptation (with Paul Walsh) of A Christmas Carol; the American premières of Tom Stoppard’s The Invention of Love and Indian Ink and Harold Pinter’s Celebration; A.C.T.-commissioned translations/adaptations of Hecuba, The Misanthrope, Enrico IV, Mary Stuart, Uncle Vanya, and A Mother, The Voysey Inheritance (adapted by David Mamet); the world première of Leslie Ayvazian’s Singer’s Boy; and major revivals of ’Tis Pity She’s a Whore, The Government Inspector, Happy End (including a critically acclaimed cast album recording), A Doll’s House, Waiting for Godot, The Three Sisters, The Threepenny Opera, Old Times, The Rose Tattoo, Antigone, Creditors, The Room, Home, The Tempest, and Stoppard’s Rock ‘n’ Roll, Travesties, The Real Thing, Night and Day, and Arcadia. Perloff’s work for A.C.T. also includes Marie Ndiaye’s Hilda, the world premières of Marc Blitzstein’s No for an Answer and David Lang/Mac Wellman’s The Difficulty of Crossing a Field, and the West Coast première of her own play The Colossus of Rhodes (Susan Smith Blackburn Award finalist).

Her play Luminescence Dating premiered in New York at The Ensemble Studio Theatre, was coproduced by A.C.T. and Magic Theatre, and is published by Dramatists Play Service. Her play Waiting for the Flood has received workshops at A.C.T., New York Stage & Film, and Roundabout Theatre Company. Her latest play, Higher, was developed at New York Stage and Film and presented at San Francisco’s Contemporary Jewish Museum in 2010; it won the 2011 Blanche and Irving Foundation Theatre Visions Fund Award and will receive its world premiere in January 2012 in San Francisco. Her one-act The Morning After was a finalist for the Heideman Award at Actors Theatre of Louisville. Perloff has collaborated as a director on new plays by many notable writers, including Gotanda, Nilo Cruz, and Robert O’Hara. She also recently directed a new Elektra for the Getty Villa in Los Angeles.

Before joining A.C.T., Perloff was artistic director of Classic Stage Company in New York, where she directed the world première of Ezra Pound’s Elektra, the American première of Pinter’s Mountain Language, and many classic works. Under Perloff’s leadership, CSC won numerous OBIE Awards, including the 1988 OBIE for artistic excellence. In 1993, she directed the world première of Steve Reich and Beryl Korot’s opera The Cave at the Vienna Festival and Brooklyn Academy of Music. A recipient of France’s Chevalier de l’Ordre des Arts et des Lettres and the National Corporate Theatre Fund’s 2007 Artistic Achievement Award, Perloff received a B.A. Phi Beta Kappa in classics and comparative literature from Stanford University and was a Fulbright Fellow at Oxford. She was on the faculty of the Tisch School of the Arts at New York University for seven years and teaches and directs in the A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program. She is the proud mother of Lexie and Nicholas.

ELLEN RICHARD
(Executive Director) joined A.C.T. as executive director in August 2010. She served previously as executive director of off Broadway’s nonprofit Second Stage Theatre in New York City. During her tenure at Second Stage, she was responsible for the purchase contract of the Helen Hayes Theatre and substantial growth in subscription income and growth in individual giving. Under Richard’s leadership, Second Stage provided the initial home for the Broadway productions Everyday Rapture, Next to Normal, and The Little Dog Laughed. From 1983 to 2005, Richard enjoyed a rich and varied career with Roundabout Theatre Company. By the time she departed as managing director, Roundabout had been transformed from a small nonprofit on the verge of bankruptcy into one of the country’s largest and most successful theater companies of its kind.

Richard is the recipient of six Tony Awards as producer, for Roundabout productions of Cabaret (1998), A View from the Bridge (1998), Side Man (1999), Nine (2003), Assassins (2004), and Glengarry Glen Ross (2005). Producer of more than 125 shows at Roundabout, she had direct supervision of all general and production management, marketing, and financial aspects of the theater’s operations. She conceptualized and oversaw the redesign of the three permanent Roundabout stages—Studio 54, the American Airlines Theatre, and the Harold and Miriam Steinberg Center for Theatre. She directed the location search for Cabaret and supervised the creation of that production’s environmental Kit Kat Klub.

Prior to her tenure at Roundabout, Richard served as business manager of Westport Country Playhouse, theater manager for Stamford Center for the Arts, and business manager for Atlas Scenic Studio. She began her career working as a stagehand, sound designer, and scenic artist assistant.

MELISSA SMITH
(Conservatory Director) oversees the administration of the A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program, Young Conservatory, Summer Training Congress, and Studio A.C.T., in addition to serving as the master acting teacher of the M.F.A. Program. Before joining A.C.T. in 1995, Smith served as director of the program in theater and dance at Princeton University, where she taught acting for six years. She has worked with people of all ages in venues around the country, including teaching in Hawaii and in Florence, Italy. Also a professional actor, she has performed in numerous off-off Broadway plays and at regional theaters, including A.C.T. In 2004 she toured London and Birmingham (U.K.) in Berkeley Repertory Theatre’s production of Continental Divide. Smith holds a B.A. in English and theater from Yale College and an M.F.A. in acting from the Yale School of Drama.
Give the gift of live theater this holiday season

Nearly 10,000 Bay Area students will see a student matinee at A.C.T. this season. For many of them, it will be their very first theater experience. During this time of budget cuts and decreased arts funding, A.C.T.’s commitment to community outreach and theater education is more important than ever. As San Francisco’s premiere nonprofit theater company, we hope you’ll join us in giving the gift of live theater to students across the Bay Area.

Text ACTSF to 20222 to make an instant $10 donation to A.C.T.’s Annual Fund.

Your tax-deductible gift will be charged to your monthly phone bill—and you will be entered into weekly drawings for a chance to win a family four-pack to A.C.T.’s upcoming production of Humor Abuse!

Endow Your Annual Support and Join the Prospero Society

Thank you, subscribers and Annual Fund donors! Your longstanding support, year after year, makes an immeasurable difference to A.C.T. and the work we do. Being able to count on your generosity allows us to take artistic risks, produce the best possible work on our stage, and train the next generation of theater artists. What will happen to this wonderful legacy of support in future generations when you are no longer here to give?

Endowing your annual gift or your annual subscription purchase through your will or other estate plan is a wonderful way to continue your current support after your lifetime and will make you an honored member of A.C.T.’s Prospero Society.

Benefits of membership include:
- Invitations to special events with guest artists
- Use of the VIP Lounge in the theater
- Recognition in A.C.T. publications

Prospero Society gifts may include:
- Bequests of cash or property through a will or living trust
- Retirement plans and life insurance that name A.C.T. as beneficiary
- Charitable annuity and remainder trusts

A.C.T. Merchandise
A.C.T.–branded merchandise, as well as books, scripts, and Words on Plays, are on sale in the main lobby, at the box office, and online.

Refreshments
Full bar service, sweets, and savory items are available one hour before the performance in Fred's Columbia Room on the lower level and the Sky Bar on the third level. You can avoid the long lines at intermission by preordering food and beverages in the lower- and third-level bars. Bar drinks are now permitted in the auditorium.

Cell Phones!
If you carry a pager, beeper, cell phone, or watch with alarm, please make sure that it is set to the “off” position while you are in the theater. Text messaging during the performance is very disruptive and not allowed.

Perfumes
The chemicals found in perfumes, colognes, and scented after-shave lotions, even in small amounts, can cause severe physical reactions in some individuals. As a courtesy to fellow patrons, please avoid the use of these products when you attend the theater.

Emergency Telephone
Leave your seat location with those who may need to reach you and have them call 415.439.2317 in an emergency.

Latecomers
A.C.T. performances begin on time. Latecomers will be seated before the first intermission only if there is an appropriate interval.

Listening Systems
Headsets designed to provide clear, amplified sound anywhere in the auditorium are available free of charge in the lobby before performances. Please turn off your hearing aid when using an A.C.T. headset, as it will react to the sound system and make a disruptive noise.

Photographs and Recordings
Photographs and recordings of A.C.T. performances are strictly forbidden.

Restrooms
Restrooms are located in Fred’s Columbia Room on the lower lobby level, the Balcony Lobby, and the Garret on the uppermost lobby level.

Wheelchair Seating

A.C.T. is pleased to announce that an Automatic External Defibrillator (AED) is now available on site.

If you’ve misplaced an item while you’re still at the theater, please look for it at our merchandise stand in the lobby. Any items found by ushers or other patrons will be taken there. If you’ve already left the theater, please call 415.439.2471 and we’ll be happy to check our lost and found for you. Please be prepared with the date you attended the performance and your seat location.
