The AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER is a Tony Award-winning nonprofit theater in which professional training and production are inextricably linked to create work that aspires to the highest standards of American performance. Under the recent leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff, A.C.T. is committed to nurturing its rich legacy while expanding its reach into new communities and new areas of dramatic literature. Central to A.C.T.'s mission is the interaction of original and classical work on our stages and at the heart of our Conservatory.

Founded in 1965 by William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season at the historic Geary Theater in 1967. During the company's twenty-nine year history, more than two hundred productions have been performed to a combined audience of six million people in Japan, the U.S.S.R., and throughout the United States. In the 1970s, A.C.T. solidified its international reputation as a leading theater and training company, winning a Tony Award for outstanding theater performance and training in 1979. From 1986 to 1992, A.C.T. experienced a period of rejuvenation and growth under the leadership of Artistic Director Edward Hastings.

Today, A.C.T. continues to fulfill the expectations of Bay Area audiences as a company of international recognition with performance, education, and outreach programs that annually reach more than two hundred thousand people in the San Francisco Bay Area.

From the beginning, A.C.T.'s philosophy has called for the union of superior repertory performance and intensive actor training. Its Conservatory, now serving fifteen hundred students every year, was the first training program not affiliated with a college or university accredited to award a Master of Fine Arts degree and is a model for the continued vitality of the art form. Danny Glover, Annette Bening, Denzel Washington, and Winona Ryder are among its distinguished former students.

The eighty-four year-old Geary Theater, which was damaged in the San Francisco earthquake of 1989, is undergoing major renovation that will result in updated stagecraft, improved patron amenities, and a total seismic restructuring. A.C.T. anticipates opening a refurbished, state-of-the-art performance space during the 1995-96 season. To date, A.C.T.'s capital campaign has raised $22 million of the funds necessary to complete the reconstruction.
ENTERTAINING EDUCATION

Come to A.C.T. for the most entertaining education in town. A.C.T. offers several ways for you to learn more about the season’s productions and to express your views on the issues they raise:

A.C.T. Prologues
Sponsored by the Junior League of San Francisco, these lively one-hour presentations are conducted by noted actors, directors, and designers who introduce each new A.C.T. play. Prologues are held before the Tuesday preview of every production at 5:30 p.m. in the same theater as the evening’s performance.

Audience Exchanges
This post-show discussion forum began last season with A.C.T.’s acclaimed production of Oleanna, David Mamet’s explosive examination of sexual harassment. These informal, anything-goes sessions are a great way to share your feelings with fellow theatergoers. Audience Exchanges take place for thirty minutes immediately after selected performances and are moderated by A.C.T. staff members.

A.C.T. Perspectives
This popular series of free public symposia, offered for the first time last season, is back in 1994-95 from 7 to 9 p.m. on selected Monday evenings throughout the season. Each symposium features a panel of scholars, theater artists, and professionals exploring topics ranging from aspects of the season’s productions to the intersection of theater and the arts with American culture. Everyone is welcome—you need not have seen a play to attend.

“Words on Plays”
In response to our many patrons who have asked to receive program notes in advance, this season for the first time A.C.T. offers you the chance to study up on coming plays. Each audience handbook contains a synopsis of the play and background information about the playwright and the social and historical context of the work. A subscription for six handbooks is available by mail to full-season subscribers for $24; a limited number of copies of handbooks for individual plays are also available for purchase by single-ticket holders at the A.C.T. Central Box Office, located at 405 Geary Street at Mason, for $5 each.

Tom Stoppard describes himself as "a bounced check"—spelled C-Z-E-C-H. Born in Zlin, Czechoslovakia, in 1937, he was soon taken to Singapore, where his father was still doctor for the Bata shoe company. When the Japanese invaded in 1942, young Tom with his mother and brother were evacuated to India, but his father did not survive World War II. His widowed mother remarried an English major named Stoppard, and the boys took his name. In India, Tom attended an American school until his departure for England in 1946, where he boarded at what the English quaintly call a "public" school, which means that it was private and expensive. Upon graduation in 1954, he bounced around in journalism: as theater critic for Scene, he saw 132 plays during the seven-month life of that periodical. The experience must have convinced him he could do at least as well as some playwrights.

In quick succession Stoppard wrote short plays, short stories, and a novel, but not yet a full-length play—although he did acquire an agent. Kenneth Ewing by name, the agent failed to obtain a hoped-for television commission for Stoppard, and, trying to comfort his client, turned the conversation to the Old Vic production of Hamlet, which they had both seen. Ewing declared that there was a play to be written about Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern after their arrival in England, Stoppard was enchanted with the idea, and even came up with a tentative title: Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern at the Court of King Lear. That's as far as Stoppard got until 1964, however, when he found himself at the end of a Ford fellowship in Berlin—where he was having a marvelous time, but hadn't produced a line of the play for which the fellowship had been awarded. So, like many others before him, he turned to Shakespeare pastiche.

Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern Are Born

The script of Stoppard's first Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern has vanished, but there are rumors of a hilarious one-act verse farce. According to Stoppard:

The whole thing was unspeakable, but it did contain some of the dialogue which still exists in the play. . . . What I do remember is that the transition from [the earlier] play to the other was an attempt to find a solution to a practical problem—that if you write a play about Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern in England, you can't count on people knowing who they are and how they got there. So one tended to get back into the end of Hamlet a bit. But the explanations were always partial and ambiguous, so one went back a bit further into the plot, and as soon as I started doing this I totally lost interest in England. The interesting thing was [Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern] at Elmore.

So interesting was it that Stoppard's play, by far the most popular of his thirty-odd original dramas, has bounced around the globe and even served as the basis of his subsequent screenplay (where he ruthlessly cut half the dialogue). In 1977, Ewing told the critic Kenneth Tynan:

Rosenkrantz opened in London in 1967. Huge overnight success—it stayed in the National Theatre repertory for about four years. The Broadway production ran for a year. Metro bought the screen rights. . . . The play had a short run in Paris. . . . But it was quite a hit in Italy, where Rosenkrantz was played by a girl. It did enormous business in Germany and Scandinavia and—oddly enough—in Japan. The play's success was, however, something of a surprise to Stoppard.

Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead was surprisingly not brought to life at the Royal Court Theatre, which supposedly thrived on new plays. Only two of the play's three acts were completed by 1965, when the Royal Shakespeare Company took an option on it, perhaps because Stoppard was co-translator of Mrozek's Tango for that company. So the first production fell to a student group at the 1966 Edinburgh Fringe Festival—fell, and nearly fell through, as sometimes happens to fringe productions at the Edinburgh Festival. When the student director disappeared, Stoppard spent thirty-six sleepless hours whipping the play into such shape as was possible without costumes or scenery in a church basement. Nevertheless, critic Ronald Bryden reported in the influential weekly Observer: "The production is the most brilliant debut by a young playwright. . . . Erudite comedy, punning, far-fetched, leaping from depth to dizziness." Kenneth Tynan, as literary advisor of Britain's National Theatre, at once acquired the performance rights, and within a year it was produced—that company's first new play.

Stoppard tinkered with Rosenkrantz during rehearsals at the National.

Sir Laurence Olivier insisted that Stoppard add a scene in which Claudius commands Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern to seek out Hamlet after he has killed Polonius. Even after the London opening, Stoppard revised the ending. Although the reviews were not unanimously favorable, they were unanimously spirited. The rest is theater history.

Stoppard adroitly dovetails Hamlet into his own play. He excerpts fragments of some twenty Shakespeare scenes, sometimes juggling Shakespeare’s order. Significantly, Stoppard wins our affection for his protagonists—nicknamed “Ros” and “Guil”—by omitting the two Shakespeare scenes which imply them in the anti-Hamlet actions of Claudius. In the Hamlet scenes that Stoppard does stage, Shakespeare’s characters—except for Ros, Guil, and the Player—speak Shakespeare’s words... well, some of his words. Upon Shakespeare’s royal characters, Stoppard foists occasional uncouthy gestures, and he belittles Hamlet when his Guil plays the Dane, whereas Ros plays the nameless English king. Moreover, Stoppard turns Hamlet’s procrastination topsy-turvy, since it is Ros and Guil who fail to act against the resolute but unpleasant prince. Finally, Stoppard steals Shakespeare’s thunder by revealing his conclusion in the title: Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead. A good knowledge of Hamlet yields a keen appreciation of Stoppard’s deft touch, but hazy recollection still permits enjoyment.

Injecting Godot into Hamlet

Stoppard has admitted that Prufrock and Beckett are “the twin syringes” of his play. T.S. Eliot’s “Lovesong of J. Alfred Prufrock” is a blueprint for Ros and Guil:

No! I am not Prince Hamlet, nor was meant to be;

An attendant lord, one that will do

To swell a progress, start a scene or two... Differential, glad to be of use...

Full of high sentence, but a bit absurd:

At times, indeed, almost ridiculous—

Almost, at times, the Fool.

Stoppard borrows more pervasively from Beckett’s Waiting for Godot, however, than from Prufrock. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are of course very minor characters in the great tragedy of the Western cultural tradition. Stoppard presents them in an Elsinore as unlocalized as Beckett’s country road, and we follow them in an action as suspenseless as Beckett’s celebrated wait. Like Beckett, Stoppard infiltrates vaudeville-type exchanges into passages of metaphysical yearning; from Beckett, Stoppard learned rising interrogative rhythms and swift disjunctive replies. In Stoppard’s drama, as in Beckett’s, the two friends play while they wait, and in both plays their games have an improvisatory quality. Ros and Guil probe coins instead of hats and shoes; they meet more people, but the probing and the meeting are similarly repetitive. They, too, make a game of asking questions; they, too, tell jokes, impersonate their betters, and refer disparagingly to us in the audience. They borrow more lines from Didi and Gogo than they do from their progenitors in Hamlet. Like Beckett’s tramps, Stoppard’s noblemen try in vain to understand their situation, which is meant to reflect our own.

A Play within a Play

Stoppard is very well aware of his theater debts, and his play is an early example of the postmodern art of quotation. His subsequent career dazzles with the range of his sources: The Real Inspector Hound parodies the mystery story as well as theater reviews. After Magritte manages to quote Surrealist painting, and Artist Descending a Staircase refers to the famous Armory Show Duchamps. Jumpers moonwalks between moral philosophy and musical comedy. Travesties travesties the Bolshevik revolution, the Dadaist revolution, and James Joyce’s single-minded art within a Wilde Earnest frame. Stoppard’s most recent play, Arcadia, punctures arcadia with chaos theory, while pitting the unsizable past against contemporary academic one-upmanship. Stoppard’s theater has been punitively called pan-parodic, but his intellectual acrobatics are always dynamically theatrical.

Stoppard never shows off with quotation for its own sake. Particularly in Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead—a play as much about a company of actors as about minor characters in a Renaissance tragedy—imitation is deeply embedded in theater. Delighted as modern actors may be to wreak vengeance on the aristocrats of Hamlet, the bravura role is that of the Player. No sooner does he appear, than he greets Ros and Guil as an audience, creating a deliberate ambiguity about the line of demarcation between performer and spectator. Shakespeare gives the Player fewer than fifty words, including his assent to learning Hamlet’s “speech of some dozen or sixteen lines.” Stoppard gives the Player some dozen or sixteen pages of brilliant dialogue, in which he broaches such subjects as entrances and exits, art versus life, patronage and performance, realism versus stylization, high versus low art, tragedy versus melodrama, script versus improvisation. And the Player theatricalizes all these theatrical subjects. Perhaps Stoppard’s most daring coup de théâtre is to enfold the plot of Hamlet into the mime show of the players, replete with the deaths of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. Stoppard’s protagonists thus become spectators of their own deaths in a play within a play within a play.

Overall, Stoppard bounces the word “play” through its several meanings. His play opens on a game, and the play’s first word is, fittingly, “Heads”—a word that applies to one side of a coin, as well as to what the audience members bring to the play. The dialogue of Stoppard’s play often second-guesses such audience reactions as boredom and inattention; the play reviews itself in a kind of interplay. And the actors not only play their parts, but those parts play with playing. In enactment, fair play and foul play begin to blur.

After the players’ several versions of violent deaths, the stage deaths of Ros and Gull fulfill the latter’s earlier definition of death: “an exit, unobtrusive and unannounced.” Once Ros and Gull disappear, ever uncertain of their identity, two ambassadors arrive from England. Stoppard’s Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead ends with the speech of Shakespeare’s Horatio, but Stoppard runs the blank verse line into journalistic prose which concludes: “purposes mistook fallen on the inventors’ heads: all this can I truly deliver.” Playfully, Stoppard has compelled our heads to mistake purposes, while he delivers the theatricality of “all this.”

And he makes us question such words as “truly.”

Ruby Cohn, retired professor of comparative drama at the University of California, Davis, is the author of the books Anglo-American Interplay: Retreats from Realism, New American Dramatists, 1960-90, From DESIRE to GODOT, and Modern Shakespeare Offshoots, among several others. On January 30, 1994, Professor Cohn will participate as a panelist in “Everyman's Theater: Roswar British Playwrights,” the third installment of this season’s free public symposium series, A.C.T. Perspectives.

From “The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock”

by T.S. Eliot

I should have been a pair of ragged claws
Scuttling across the floors of silent seas.

And the afternoon, the evening, sleeps so peacefully!
Smoothed by long fingers,
Asleep... tired... or it malingers,
Stretched on the floor, here beside you and me.
Should I, after tea and cakes and ices,
Have the strength to force the moment to its crisis?
But though I have wept and fasted, wept and prayed, Though I have seen my head (grown slightly bald) brought in upon a platter,
I am no prophet—and here's no great matter;
I have seen the moment of my greatness flicker,
And I have seen the eternal Footman hold my coat, and snicker,
And in short, I was afraid....

No! I am not Prince Hamlet, nor was meant to be;
Am an attendant lord, one that will do
To swell a progress, start a scene or two,
Advise the prince; no doubt, an easy tool,
Deferential, glad to be of use,
Polite, cautious, and meticulous;
Full of high sentence, and a bit obtuse;
At times, indeed, almost ridiculous—
Almost, at times, the Fool.

I grow old... I grow old...
I shall wear the bottoms of my trousers rolled.

Shall I part my hair behind? Do I dare to eat a peach?
I shall wear white flannel trousers, and walk upon the beach.
I have heard the mermaids singing, each to each.

I do not think that they will sing to me.

I have seen them riding seaward on the waves
Combining the white hair of the waves blown back
When the wind blows the water white and black.

We have lingered in the chambers of the sea
By sea-girls wreathed with seaweed red and brown
Till human voices wake us, and we drown.
Always too eager for the future, we
Pick up bad habits of expectancy.
Something is always approaching, every day
Till then we say,

Watching from a bluff the tiny, clear,
Sparkling armada of promises draw near.
How slow they are! And how much time they waste,
Refusing to make haste!

Yet still they leave us holding wretched stalks
Of disappointment, for, though nothing balks
Each big approach, leaning with brasswork prinked,
Each rope distinct,

Flagged, and the figurehead with golden tis Arching our way, it never anchors; it's
No sooner present than it turns to past.
Right to the last.

We think each one will heave to and unload
All good into our lives, all we are owed
For waiting so devoutly and so long.
But we are wrong:

Only one ship is seeking us, a black-
Sailed unfamiliar, towing at her back
A huge and birdless silence. In her wake
No waters breed or break.

If you are a playwright, the odds are less than favorable you will convince a theater—large or small—to risk a production of your new work; the odds of that work becoming a success once it's up and running are even more painful to contemplate. Behind every "successful" play is the story not only of its germination, but of its journey to first one stage, and then, with luck, more and more stages across the world. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead beat the odds for Tom Stoppard, proving that with a single play an author can achieve success that is both overnight and permanent.

In 1964 Stoppard was finishing up a five-month Ford Foundation grant that had paid for twenty young European playwrights to live and write as part of a cultural exchange in a Berlin mansion. At the end of the grant term the recipients were expected to present excerpts of their works in progress for a troupe of amateur actors to perform. Stoppard composed a one-act burlesque called Roscenrantz and Guildenstern Meet King Lear, inspired by a question his agent had posed wondering which king the two lowly characters from Hamlet might have found upon reaching Britain. Soon afterwards, Stoppard scrapped that piece and began to write a new version using Hamlet as a starting point. Two of the three acts were completed a year later, and the Royal Shakespeare Company secured the rights to it for a twelve-month period.
During this time Stoppard supported himself and his wife by writing for a BBC serial about the life of an Arab medical student in London.

When the RSC failed to fit the play into its repertoire, Roscenrantz and Guildenstern was given to the
amateur Oxford Theatre
Group to mount in the 1966
Edinburgh Fringe Festi-

weekend review by Observer theater critic Robert Bryman: “[R&G] is the most brilliant debut by a young playwright since John Arden.”

So glowing was Bryman’s review, in fact, that National Theatre literary advisor Kenneth Tynan immediately requested a script, and, after conferring for a week with his boss, Sir Laurence Olivier, bought the rights to the play. Six months later it was in rehearsal. Stoppard met frequently with Olivier and Tynan to cut and revise the script, Olivier suggesting the addition of a key scene from Hamlet that had been left out in which Rosencrantz and Guildenstern accost Hamlet after he has hidden Polonius’s body.

On April 11, 1967, the play had its London debut at the National’s Old Vic theater, directed by twenty-five-year-old Derek Goldby and starring John Stride as Rosencrantz and Edward Petherbridge as Guildenstern. At twenty-nine Stoppard was the youngest playwright ever to have a work produced by the prestigious National.

Although Stoppard ducked out of the performance after a man sitting in front of him said to his companion, “I do wish they’d get on with it,” Rosencrantz and Guildenstern was a smash hit. Overnight Stoppard found himself on the front pages of all the major papers, his play hailed as the most important first-produced work by a British playwright since Harold Pinter’s The Birthday Party, his name distinguished by the designation “boy genius.” Rosencrantz and Guildenstern ran in repertory at the Old Vic for three-and-a-half years; Stoppard won the Evening Standard’s 1967–68 Most Promising Playwright Award and the John Whiting Award.

In 1968, seven months after the London opening, Stoppard and his play traveled to New York—the first production of Olivier’s National Theatre to come to America. Again, praise from critics was overwhelming: “[Stoppard] is among the finest English-speaking writers of our stage.” The New York Times’s Clive Barnes, high priest of theater critics, wrote a rave that was the crowning glory. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern went on to win both the 1968 Tony and Drama Critics’ Circle awards for best play. That same year A.C.T. founding general director William Ball presented it for the first of three consecutive seasons, between 1968 and 1972, commencing a relationship between A.C.T. and Stoppard that would continue with productions of his Junkers in 1974, Travesties in 1977 and 1978, Night and Day in 1981, The Real Thing in 1987, and Hapgood in 1990, and would include frequent visits to A.C.T. by the playwright.

But perhaps the most savory “review” Stoppard ever received came that opening night in New York while he was at a bar near the theater with his (first) wife, Joie, and producer David Merrick—all three of them anxiously awaiting judgment from the press and the public. Once it became clear that the news from all corners was good, a bartender winked and grinned at Stoppard as he announced, “Ah, you’re in, kid!”

Performance Highlights
Presented by CHRYSLER

Of all the Nutcrackers opening at this time of year—and every city with a ballet must have one—the San Francisco Ballet’s annual tradition may be the most grand. SFB presented America’s first full-length production of Tchaikovsky’s holiday tale 50 years ago, and this year celebrates the production’s golden anniversary. Opening night is December 13, and is given added moment by an appearance by nonagenarian William Christensen, who contributed additional choreography (along with Helgi Tomasson) to his brother Lew Christensen’s original work, and is this year’s honorary Chairman. After opening night, ballet enthusiasts and holiday revelers will find little excuse to miss the Mouse King and Sugar Plum Fairy: from December 14 through the 31, the ballet offers two performances every day—except, of course, on Christmas. The New Year’s Eve performance features a party running past midnight, along with dance bands, desserts, and champagne.

The Center for Advanced Automotive Design is now open for family tours.

Not only was it developed at one of the most advanced vehicle research and development facilities in the world, but each Chrysler Concorde is in itself something of a mobile design center. Begin with a walk around the grounds. Note the wind-cheating profile of its innovative cab-forward design—longer wheelbase, wider track, aggressively raked windshield. As you step in, observe the enlarged rear doors, the easier entry and exit. Once inside the spacious interior, take a hands-on tour of ergonomically placed controls. (Don’t miss the dual front air bags; they’re standard.) And a spectrum of noise-buffering components is at the ready to keep the peace as the whole family takes the road tour. Your guides will be Concorde’s powerful V6 engine and advanced four-speed automatic transmission. For more tour information, see your local Chrysler-Plymouth dealer, or call 1-800-4-A-CHRYSLER.

New Year’s celebrations also get under way at the San Francisco Symphony. On December 28 at Flint Center and 29 and 31 at Davies Symphony Hall, the SFS takes concertgoers to “A Night in Old Vienna.” The evening is conducted by Erich Binder and features soprano Cheryl Parrish. The New Year’s Eve performance culminates in bubbly and box-steps onstage. In other holiday-oriented events, the San Francisco Symphony Chorus is featured in a “Candlelight Christmas,” with a carol sing-along, on December 4; the Empire Brass and organist David Higgs are the stars of “Christmas Pipe Dreams,” which features the 9,000-pipe Ruffatti organ (the largest concert-hall organ in North America); and, for more modern renditions of Yuletide tunes, there’s “The Colors of Christmas,” with Peabo Bryson, Sheena Easton, Roberta Flack, and James Ingram. Last, but not least, and just as dependable as the annual Nutcracker, is Handel’s Messiah. Three performances are presented on December 15, 16, and 17, conducted by James Paul and featuring soloists Ollie Watts Davis, Meredith Parsons, Tracey Welborn, and Richard Bernstein.

At the Stage Door Theatre, the American Conservatory Theater joins a stateside Tom Stoppard renaissance which finds New York mountings of the playwright’s two latest plays, Arcadia and Haygood. Director Richard Seyd goes back to Stoppard’s famous beginnings by reviving his first play, the classic absurdist puzzlebox Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead. Dan Hiatt and Ray Porter star as the titular Shakespearian bit players, and performances begin December 14 with opening night exactly one week later.

"Do you know me?"

Flowers are messengers of our sentiments, our wishes, and our dreams. They make us happy and they console us when we're sad. They go deeply into our souls.

Flowers also mark the milestones in our lives. Graduations, weddings. Even when we're Flowers were the priority. So we froze. I love what I do. I love flowers and I love what they bring to other people's lives. It's a happy job. It really is.

Most of our phone orders are paid for through credit cards. And, interestingly enough, born, someone sends us flowers to say, 'Welcome to the world."

I've adored flowers since I was a child. So one day I decided to follow my dream and started this business in my kitchen. This was around Christmas and it was very cold. To preserve the flowers, I had to keep all of the windows and doors open.

Once I began writing it, I was depressed—it seemed like too much of an in-joke. What I'm really doing is to communicate my private neuroses to see if anyone shares them. I also want to share my private sense of humor, if I can.

[Robencrantz and Guildenstern] chose themselves to a certain extent. I mean that the play Hamlet and the characters Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are the only play and the only characters on which you could write my kind of play. They are so much more than merely bit players in another famous play. Hamlet. I suppose is the most famous play in any language, it is part of a sort of common mythology. I am continually being asked politely whether I will write about the messenger in Oedipus Rex which misses the point....

There are certain things which they bring on with them, particularly the fact that they end up dead without really, as far as any textual evidence goes, knowing why. Hamlet's assumption that they were privy to Claudius's plot is entirely gratuitous. As far as their involvement in Shakespeare's text is concerned they are told very little about what is going on and much of what they are told isn't true. So I see them much more clearly as a couple of bewildered innocents rather than a couple of henchmen, which is the usual way they are depicted in productions of Hamlet.

Influences such as appear in Rosencrantz, and any play of anybody else's, are I suppose admirations that have been unsuccessfully repressed or obscured. I don't mean consciously! But, of the influences that have been invoked on my behalf, and they have been Beckett, Kafka, Pirandello, of course, I suppose Beckett is the easiest one to make, yet the most deceptive. Most people who say Beckett mean Waiting for Godot. They haven't read his novels, for example. I can see a lot of Beckettian things in all my work, but they're not actually to do with the image of two lost souls waiting for something to happen, which is why most people connect Rosencrantz with Waiting for Godot, because they had this scene in common....

I find Beckett deliciously funny in the way that he qualifies everything as he goes along, reduces, refines and dismantles. When I read it I love it and when I write I just guess it comes out as other things come out. As for Pirandello, I know very little about him, I'm afraid. I've seen very little and I really wasn't aware of that as an influence. It would be very difficult to write a play which was totally unlike Beckett, Pirandello, and Kafka, who's your father, you know?

I liked [Lord Malquist and Mr. Moon, Stoppard's novel, which sold fewer than seven hundred copies when it was published in 1966] enormously when I wrote it—I worked on it for months, all day and half the night . . . and I thought it would be a great success and that Rosencrantz, which I'd just finished, would simply be an interesting episode . . . Things you write tend to go off, like fruit. There are very few things I've written that haven't tended to decompose, later on, before my startled gaze—that is perfectly natural, since literary material isn't mineral but organic, and nature changes—but Malquist wears well, at least for me.

My play was not written as a response to anything about alienation in our times . . . It would be fatal to set out to write primarily on an intellectual level. Instead, one writes about human beings under stress—whether it is about losing one's trousers or being nailed to the cross.

Whenever I talk to intelligent students about my work, I feel nervous, as if I were going through customs. "Anything to declare, sir?" "Not really, just two chaps sitting in a castle at Elsinore, playing games. That's all." "Then let's have a look in your suitcase, if you don't mind, sir." And, sure enough, under the first layer of shirts there's a pound of hash and fifty watches and all kinds of exotic contraband. "How do you explain this, sir?" "I'm sorry, Officer, I admit it's there, but I honestly can't remember packing it."

I might subscribe to certain beliefs on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday and to a totally different set on Tuesday and Thursday. I think that a sense of conflict between one's emotional response to absolute morality and one's rational sense of the implausibility of there being a God is obviously a part of what I call "the Ping Pong game." I always write about two people arguing. I play Ping Pong with myself, but there is no killing shot. It is like Ping Pong against a clock; there is a tendency for the argument to be won by the person who finishes speaking when the bell goes, rather than because there is nothing left to say.

Shakespeare's Hamlet
A Synopsis

Tom Stoppard interlaces some two hundred and fifty lines of Hamlet into the script of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead. While it is not necessary to know Hamlet to appreciate Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, it certainly helps.

Act II

Weeks pass, and Hamlet can not bringing himself to move against Claudius. To avert suspicion while he ponders whether to act or not to act, Hamlet pretends madness, in the process frightening Ophelia, who has dutifully agreed not to see him any more. Claudius and Gertrude want to know why Hamlet is behaving so strangely; Polonius says that Hamlet's insanity is driven by thwarted love. Claudius sends two of Hamlet's friends, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, to see the prince and try to figure out what's wrong with him. A troupe of travelling players comes to the castle, and Hamlet arranges for them to enact before the court a tragedy containing an incident very like the alleged murder of his father, so that he can watch Claudius's reaction and thus confirm his uncle's guilt.

Act III

The next day, Hamlet shocks Ophelia with wild denunciations against women and marriage. During the players' performance, a visibly distraught Claudius flees the hall and orders Rosencrantz and Guildenstern to take his lunatic nephew away to England. Hamlet goes to his mother's chamber and condemns her so ferociously that she cries out in fear; Polonius, spying from behind an arras, also shouts out. Hamlet, believing the spy to be Claudius, stabs and kills Polonius through the arras. The ghost interrupts to remind Hamlet of his vengeful duty; Hamlet drags Polonius's body away.

Act IV

Now convinced that her son is truly crazy, Gertrude tells Claudius about Polonius's death. Claudius orders Rosencrantz and Guildenstern to escort Hamlet to England; they carry documents ordering Hamlet's execution upon his arrival there. Laertes returns to Elsinore from France demanding an explanation for the murder of his father; a deranged Ophelia wanders around singing distractedly. Claudius explains what happened to Polonius and that he dare not punish Hamlet because of the love of the queen and country for the prince. Sailors arrive, bearing letters from Hamlet to his close friend Horatio. He writes that pirates attacked the ship bound for England and that they have helped him return to Elsinore. Frustrated, Claudius and Laertes plot an "accidental" death for the prince; Laertes will engage Hamlet in a sword fight using a poison-tipped foil. The queen enters to announce that Ophelia has drowned herself.

Act V

Hamlet meets Horatio in the graveyard at Elsinore, where they come across Ophelia's funeral, and Hamlet and Laertes fight over her grave. Hamlet tells Horatio how he discovered the plot to kill him in England and escaped, after forcing an order for Rosencrantz and Guildenstern to carry that would guarantee the execution of his (former) friends upon their arrival in England.

As Hamlet and Laertes later fence before the court, Claudius drops a poisoned pearl into a drink intended for Hamlet; the queen unwittingly drinks from the cup instead. In the frenzy of the fight, Laertes wounds and switches foils with Hamlet, who in turn mortally wounds Laertes. The queen swoons as she warns her son about the poisoned cup. The dying Laertes begs Hamlet's forgiveness and blames Claudius for the scheme. Hamlet runs Claudius through and forces him to drink the poison. Horatio in his grief tries to take the cup, as well; but, as he dies in Horatio's arms, Hamlet stops his friend with a plea to live to tell the truth of the tale. Ambassadors from England enter the corpse-strewn hall and announce that "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead."

A.C.T.'s Angels Takes Wing

The initial run of A.C.T.'s acclaimed production of Angels in America, originally scheduled at the Marines Memorial Theatre through January 22, 1995, has sold out. To accommodate the Bay Area's enthusiastic response to Tony Kushner's Pulitzer Prize-winning two-part epic, A.C.T. has extended the run. The telephones in the A.C.T. box office have been ringing off the hook since early September, so call now (415-749-2AC) to order tickets to the production Steven Winn of the San Francisco Chronicle called "a journey any adventurous theatergoer will not want to miss."

In Remembrance of Angels

To commemorate its landmark production of Angels in America, A.C.T. is offering angelic souvenirs for purchase at A.C.T.'s Central Box Office, the Marines Memorial Theatre, and Macy's San Francisco souvenir shop. Now available are posters, one hundred percent cotton tee-shirts, and greeting cards—all featuring Thomas Heiser's stunning photograph of A.C.T.'s elegant Angel, Lise Bruneau—as well as copies of the play's two-volume script, published by Theatre Communications Group. You, too, can be an angel while doing your holiday shopping: A.C.T. is donating ten percent of all net proceeds from the sale of Angels merchandise to the San Francisco General Hospital Foundation, which is establishing a fund to improve patient care in Ward 86, the AIDS clinic.
A.C.T.'s production of Angels in America as a starting point. Speaking to a full house at the Marines Memorial Theatre on November 7, these scholars inaugurated the A.C.T. Perspective series with a lively and provocative two-hour discussion.

Upcoming A.C.T. Perspectives symposia include "Cries of Faith: Death and Dying in the New Millennium" (January 9, 1995 at the Marines Memorial Theatre), and "Everyman's Theater: Postwar British Playwriting" (January 30, 1995 at the Stage Door Theatre). In May 1995, look for symposia related to A.C.T.'s productions of Oh! Calcutta and Hedda. All symposia are on Monday nights from 7 to 9 p.m. and free of charge. For more information, call the A.C.T. box office at (415) 749-2ACT.

JOHN GOLDMAN HEADS THE GEARY THEATER MAJOR GIFTS CAMPAIGN

While construction on the earthquake-damaged Geary Theater proceeds apace, A.C.T. embarks on the final phase of the capital campaign to raise the funds necessary to complete the historic theater's renovation and seismic restructuring: $3.5 million still remains to be raised on the $26 million project. Charged with meeting this challenge is trustee John D. Goldman, newly appointed chairman of the Major Gifts Committee of A.C.T.'s Geary Theater Campaign, which is seeking individual gifts of $10,000 or more.

A native San Franciscan and graduate of Swarthmore College and the Stanford Graduate School of Business, Goldman is president of Richard N. Goldman & Co., a prominent San Francisco insurance brokerage firm. He has also served in the Office of the Legislative Analyst and as Assistant Secretary of Transportation for the State of California. Active in community and philanthropic activities, he is a past president of the board of Jewish Family and Children's Services and currently serves on the boards of the Crystal Springs-Uplands School and American-Israel Public Affairs Committee; the board of governors of the Western Association of Insurance Brokers; the advisory boards of the Wildlife Conservation Society and the Trust for Public Land; and the Academy Council of the California Academy of Sciences and the President's Council of the Coyote Point Center for Environmental Education. Goldman is also an honorary board member of Project Open Hand, a trustee of the Goldman Environmental Foundation, and a former board member of the Institute on Aging of Mt. Zion Health Systems.

A.C.T. welcomes Goldman's commitment to the Geary Theater Campaign and invites those interested in participating to contact David Hagar, Director of Development, A.C.T., 30 Grant Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94108, (415) 834-3333.
INTRODUCING A.C.T.'S NEW RESIDENT PLAYWRIGHT: MAC WELLMAN

A.C.T. has received a $100,000 grant from Theatre Communications Group (TCG) to fund a two-year playwriting residency for Mac Wellman, a New York writer, editor, and dramaturg well known in off-Broadway circles for his site-specific satires and outrageous way with words. Beginning in December 1994, and continuing into the 1996-97 season, Wellman’s residency will round out A.C.T.’s artistic staff with the fresh voice of a leading contemporary playwright, while providing Wellman with financial and institutional support to produce new work.

The author of some forty plays—including the signature pieces The Hyacinth House and Swoop (a series of monologues delivered by vampires flying over New York City)—and winner of six OBIE awards, Wellman has a penchant for producing his works in thematically relevant locations. He has put up his plays in the Hall of Dinosaurs in the Smithsonian Institution, the lake in Central Park, and a Staten Island landfill.

Most of Wellman’s time at A.C.T. will be spent writing two full-length plays—the first a site-specific work on the themes of earthquake and “cthonic wonderment.” Written for a company of Bay Area actors and graduates of A.C.T.’s Conservatory, this new play will first be presented in a workshop production in the spring of 1995.

Wellman will also take part in the artistic life of A.C.T. As an advocate for the local playwriting community, he will advise on play selection for both the A.C.T. mainstage and for the development of a second stage, which A.C.T. hopes to bring to fruition once construction on the Geary is completed. In his role as resident mentor, he will work with the PTTs and will lead a three-month community workshop on dramatic, script analysis, and dramatic criticism. A.C.T. hopes through Wellman’s visibility and interaction with the community to create a blueprint for a second stage that will benefit from a practicing playwright’s perspective and to take a more active role in the encouragement of new American playwriting.
