AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER is a Tony Award-winning repertory theater and conservatory. From the conservatory classroom to the stage of the Geary Theater, A.C.T. nurtures the art of live theater through vivid mainstage productions, intensive actor training, and a dynamic dialogue with its community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff, A.C.T. artists and audiences share a commitment to the highest standards in the creation of engaging, entertaining, and compelling work worthy of the landmark theater that is A.C.T.’s home.

Founded in 1965 by William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season at the Geary Theater in 1967. During the past three decades, more than 300 A.C.T. productions have been performed to a combined audience of seven million people in Japan, the former Soviet Union, and the United States. In the 1970s, A.C.T. solidified its national and international reputation, winning a Tony Award for outstanding theater performance and training in 1979. Today, A.C.T.’s performance, education, and outreach programs annually reach more than 200,000 people in the San Francisco Bay Area. A.C.T.’s efforts in the commissioning and performance of new work were recognized with this season’s prestigious Jujamcyn Theaters Award.

Since Perloff’s appointment in 1992, A.C.T. has enjoyed unprecedented success with groundbreaking productions of classical works and bold explorations of contemporary playwriting. In the belief that an atmosphere of constant learning engenders work that is fresh, uncompromising, and alive, A.C.T. provides a fertile ground for the growth of new and established theater artists and audiences. While looking toward the future, A.C.T. also embraces its responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent its relationship to the rich theatrical traditions and literatures that are our collective legacy.

From the beginning, A.C.T.’s philosophy has called for the union of superior repertory performance and intensive actor training. The conservatory, now serving 1,400 students every year, was the first training program not affiliated with a college or university accredited to award a master of fine arts degree. Danny Glover, Annette Bening, Denzel Washington, and Winona Ryder are among its distinguished former students. With the 1995 appointment of Melissa Smith as conservatory director, A.C.T. has renewed its commitment to excellence in actor training and to the relationship between training, performance, and audience, making the conservatory a vital force in the ongoing evolution of the theatrical art form to which A.C.T. is committed.

KAUFMAN AND FERBER: A RELATIONSHIP THAT WORKED

by Jeff Adams

At first glance, the pairing of Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman seems unlikely. She was an ascendant novelist; he was an established man of the theater. She was engaged in an ongoing solitary struggle with the blank page; he was a serial collaborator always on the lookout for fresh material and the next stage project. Her stock in trade was the dynastic family epic; his was the theatrical satire. Despite similar family backgrounds and shared beginnings in journalism, their temperaments were as different as night and day; she relished the quiet hours, he the verve of New York City. One wonders where the two could find common ground. Yet their partnership not only worked, it thrived—perhaps because their stylistic differences and enormous talents were so complementary. And they did share two essential qualities of the successful playwright: a herculean capacity for work, as well as a profound respect for the theater.

Kaufman and Ferber wrote six plays together over the course of 24 years:

Minick (1924), The Royal Family (1927), Dinner at Eight (1932, produced by A.C.T. in 1993), Stage Door (1936), The Land Is Bright (1941), and Bravow! (1948). Thus Ferber ranks third—behind Marc Connelly and Moss Hart—among the dozen or so people with whom Kaufman wrote more than 40 plays. In addition, many of Ferber’s own novels were adapted for the stage and screen, among them the Pulitzer Prize-winning So Big (1924), Show Boat (1926), Cimarron (1929), Saratoga Trunk (1941), and Giant (1952).

STAR STRUCK

As a schoolgirl, Ferber developed an attraction to the theater and longed to take to the stage. She once said:

There was born in me the most enormous respect and admiration, for actors. I admire their courage and their love of their work; their vanity and their humility and their angelic hopefulness. When they work they work harder than any craft, trade, or profession I’ve ever known, under the most maddening and idiotic of circumstances, and they almost never complain.

In her later years, she wrote, “To this day I regard myself as a blighted Bernhardt.”

Ferber’s first novel, Dawn O’Hara, was published in 1911, more than a decade before her first meeting with Kaufman. It was during this time that her stories about Emma McChesney, the traveling saleswoman, brought her to national prominence. As Malcolm Goldstein relates in his biography, George S. Kaufman: His Life, His Theater:

Ferber began to receive letters from New York producers about the dramatic rights to the McChesney stories. But, busy with other projects, she held off until 1914, when, at the behest of Charles Frohman, she agreed to dramatize them herself in collaboration with George V. Hobart, a Broadway man-of-all-work. It was Frohman’s thought that Ethel Barrymore, his brightest star, was right for the role of the saleswoman. In view of Barrymore’s appealing looks and aristocratic bearing, Ferber felt that this was a curious choice. She acceded to it, however, and thereupon became star struck.

The play, Our Mrs. McChesney, went on to 151 performances, a respectable run despite lukewarm reviews. Ferber’s love for the theater—and her admiration for Barrymore’s talent and professionalism—endured, finding its ultimate expression in The Royal Family. In 1927, however, Barrymore’s pique over that play, specifically its portrayal of a theatrical clan with strong resemblance to her own hugely famous family, would precipitate her long-time estrangement from both Ferber and Kaufman.

The Royal Family was Kaufman and Ferber’s second collaboration. They had met four years earlier, in 1923, when Kaufman had begun to cast about for a replacement for Marc Connelly, with whom he had recently severed his relationship. He had read and admired a Ferber short story, “Old Man Minick,” and suggested by letter to her that the two turn the story into a play. She had reservations about the story’s dramatic potential (although it eventually ran for 141 performances, it was not considered a big hit). Foremost on Ferber’s agenda, however, was meeting Kaufman, who by that time had firmly established himself as a New York Times critic and as a dramatist of some renown. Ferber was immediately drawn to Kaufman, a married man whose strong devotion to his wife Beatrice would become as well known as his philandering. Ferber never married, and many observers theorize that she remained hopelessly in love with Kaufman for the rest of her life.

STRICTLY BUSINESS

“Women did love my father. He was a very attractive man,” says Anne Kaufman Schneider, the daughter of George and Beatrice Kaufman, who today lives in New York and remains involved in productions of her father’s work. Schneider is quick to point out that Kaufman’s relationship with Ferber was strictly business. She describes what she felt made Ferber not only an ideal partner, but also her father’s professional equal: “You had to be careful of Edna. She was a very prickly person. She was a lot like my father—she didn’t suffer fools gladly. They had different habits, but they worked together really well. She was quite a funny woman, and he was very fond of her. He was a very, very hard worker and would have admired that quality enormously in her. No, there was nothing but work between them.”
My father described all of his collaborations as being ‘like marriage without sex.’

Nevertheless, Ferber’s relationship with Beatrice Kaufman was reportedly somewhat strained. In her biography, Ferber, Julie Goldsmith Gilbert writes:

“One of Ferber’s gossipy friends was Beatrice (Bea) Kaufman. She was one of the few women whom Ferber did lunch with on occasion. On the most sophisticated level, they were girlfriends—gossiping, theater going, party arranging. On a more basic level they were natural enemies, although neither would have admitted it for the world.

Schneider remembers the two women as very similar in appearance, and neither was what could be described as beautiful. “Edna espoused causes,” remembers Schneider. “During World War II, she came to my father and supposedly remarked, ‘We should do something for the war. What should I do?’ My father apparently answered, ‘Well, Edna, you could be a tank.”

“Above all else that could be said about him,” Malcolm Goldstein writes of Kaufman, he had a passion for work. Even while writing one play and directing another, he developed ideas for still another and the one after that. If, while writing or rehearsing, he still did not have enough to occupy his mind, he would try to inveigle friends and acquaintances into turning out scripts that he could produce or direct later on. Only by pursuing a restless course from collaboration to collaboration could he use up enough energy so that he could maintain a semblance of calm.

Schneider concurs, with one caveat—Kaufman never brought his work home with him, and he did find other ways to relax. “He never talked about anything he was working on; he only talked about it when it was done. He really treated writing as work. And he did not say things like, ‘I just thought of this. Do you think it’s funny?’ When he finished writing, he went to play bridge. He was also a great croquet player.”

When asked how she felt about growing up with such a famous and sought-after father, Schneider replies, “To me, it was a very normal life. People have told me it wasn’t, but to me it was.”

Schneider says it was probably Ferber who inspired The Royal Family, but “the structure of the play was his—because he was very, very good at that. The characters are very ‘novellic’; they’re very Ferber characters. I’m sure Dinner at Eight was also her idea.” And, according to Schneider, it was not so much that the play seemed to be a thinly veiled pièce à déf about the Barrymores that annoyed Ethel. What really bothered the grand Barrymore was the fact that the character Herbert Dean, Fanny Cavendish’s brother, was portrayed as a ham, implying that her own family could include such a poor actor among its members.

Casting Trouble

Whatever the true nature of the controversy, and whatever their individual contributions to The Royal Family, neither Kaufman nor Ferber could have been prepared for the casting problems that beset the production from the start. Ferber had hoped that her lifelong idol would accept the role of Julie Cavendish and was honestly surprised that Barrymore was angered by the play. Intimidated by Barrymore’s open disapproval, well-regarded actresses approached for the part of Julie (including Ina Claire and Laurette Taylor) refused, presumably on the grounds that playing the part might in some way diminish their own standing. In addition, the character of Julie, who becomes a grandmother by the end of the play, was considered somewhat over the hill—not the most enticing of roles. At one point, after a particularly discouraging series of rejections, the still stage-struck Ferber offered to play the part herself. Her offer was declined.

An actress named Ann Andrews was finally chosen to play Julie, and Haidée Wright, an English-born performer, to portray Fanny. Otto Kruger took on the role of Tony Cavendish, while Jefferson de Angelis played Oscar Wolfe. But, although the actors had been chosen, the casting problems did not end. The notoriously obnoxious Jed Harris, The Royal Family’s producer, was so displeased with the performances during rehearsal that, after one week of work, he fired the entire ensemble, paying each of them two weeks severance. Only the subsequent threat of losing the play to another producer caused Harris to reconsider, rehire everyone, find a new director, and steel himself for a less-than-perfect production.

The Royal Family premiered at Broadway’s Selwyn Theatre on December 28, 1927—noticeably without Ferber, who chose to spend the evening at home, having dinner on a tray (she had also skipped the première of Show Boat the night before). The play was up against formidable competition, opening in the same week as 16 other plays, including A Connecticut Yankee, The Doctor's Dilemma, Paris Bound, The Taming of the Shrew, and Hamlet. Although critical reception of the production cannot be described as ecstatic, Alexander Woollcott—a famously acerbic reviewer—was inspired to write, "The Royal Family gave me the most thoroughly enjoyable first night I had experienced in many and many a week. The play does shine with the ancient and still un tarn is hed glamour of the stage." The Royal Family's 345-performance run—the best of Kaufman's career to that date—followed by successful touring productions, solidified the Kaufman-Ferber dramatic partnership and set the stage for subsequent successes, most notably Dinner at Eight five years later.

A Hit on Stage

Despite the turmoil surrounding casting The Royal Family, Edna Ferber's longtime desire to perform remained undiminished for a number of years. Finally, when The Royal Family was revived in Maplewood, New Jersey, on August 13, 1940, Ferber got her big break. The play's producer, Cheryl Crawford, graciously granted the author one week in which to play the part of Fanny Cavendish. Ferber's one venture into acting gave new meaning to the notion of being a hit on stage. As she recounts it:

*After a terrific bravura speech all about the theater and the Cavendish clan and the art of acting, I was supposed to faint; and then to be carried by Louis Calhern up the stairs and ostensibly into a second-floor attic bedroom; no mean feat. Halfway up the stairs he dropped me. As I thumped to the steps the audience sat petrified. So did I. I toyed with the idea of fainting in reality, but the Ferbers are not a fainting family. Louis Calhern and I managed, by a mish-mash of scrambles, hobbles, and a second heroin-laced effort of tugging on his port, to get me through the upstairs exit and presumably into an attic bed. At the end of this accomplished feat there issued from the audience a burst of hysterical applause interspersed with helpless shrieks of laughter. Ferber never again trod the boards."

In the end, both The Royal Family and the Kaufman-Ferber collaboration enjoyed long and successful careers. In addition to numerous tours and revivals, the play was filmed in 1930 as The Royal Family of Broadway, directed by George Cukor, with Ina Claire and Frederic March as Julie and Tony Cavendish. A London production in 1934, titled Theatre Royal, was directed by Noel Coward and featured a young actor named Laurence Olivier. A.C.T.'s production confirms not only the longevity of the play's appeal, but also the brilliance of its two most compatible collaborators.

*Jeff Adams is a Bay Area novelist and editor of Archeology: the long lost tales of archy and mehitabel (University Press of New England).*

THE ROYAL BARRYMORES

by Jessica Werner

When George Kaufman and Edna Ferber's comedy about a glamorous dynasty of actors premiered on Broadway in 1927, the public readily assumed that The Royal Family was based on the legendary Barrymore family. The sibling triumvirate of Lionel, Ethel, and John had been dubbed the "royal family of the theater" by the press years earlier, an epithet that continued to ring true as the Barrymores headlined Broadway's neon marquees throughout the ensuing decades.

Ethel, the first of the three to take to the stage, had honed her craft as a young actor in turn-of-the-century London, winning audiences with an acting style of unprece dented naturalness and elegance. She debuted on Broadway in her first starring role at age 21 and eventually became the "first lady" of the American stage. Comparable accolades were showered on both her brothers: John, dashingy handsome and famous for his debauchery, was honored by one 1920s reviewer as "the greatest of our younger actors" for his powerful 1920 portrayal of Richard III and his psychological rendition of Hamlet in 1922; Lionel, the eldest, was the preeminent character actor of his day, assaying challenging roles on both stage and screen with equal aplomb.

The glamorous details of the Barrymores' flamboyant personal lives were well-known facts that spilled daily across newspaper gossip pages. It is thus no surprise that the public should see in Kaufman and Ferber's stage family, the Cavendishes, similarities to the extravagant and notoriously tempestamental Barrymores. Fanny Cavendish, the matriarch who presides regally over the theatrical chaos of the Cavendish home, is a striking incarnation of Mrs. John (Louisa) Drew, the formidable grandmother who singlehandedly raised Lionel, Ethel, and John while their parents were away acting in touring productions. As manager of Philadelphia's Arch Street Theater, Mrs. Drew was the first woman in the United States to run an important theater and was responsible for ushering each of her grandchildren into a life on the stage. Fanny's elegant daughter, Julie Cavendish, was considered a portrait of Ethel, who spent her life orchestrating the lives and careers of her two brothers. Aubrey Cavendish, Fanny's deceased husband whose portrait dominates the Cavendish living room, is a fitting parallel to the late John Drew Sr., the 19th-century stage idol. Even aspects of the Barrymores' long-suffering manager, Charles Frohman, could be seen in the character Oscar Wolfe.

Kaufman and Ferber denied using the Barrymores as their exclusive inspiration, however, admitting only that the character Tony Cavendish—a matinee idol with surplus charm and bravura who gives up his stage career for Hollywood—was modeled on John Barrymore. "We only used bits of him, though," said Ferber. "He was, of course, much too improbable to copy from life."

DYNASTIC MYSTIQUE

In fact, with surprising naiveté, Kaufman and Ferber both hoped that Ethel and John Barrymore would play the lead roles in The Royal Family, and sent the first two acts of the script to Ethel. They were wholly unprepared for the vitriolic response that followed—not only did Ethel turn down the role of Julie, but she immediately consulted a prominent lawyer to obtain an injunction prohibiting all productions of the play. After counsel advised that her case was too weak for a suit, Ethel severed all ties with the playwrights, whom she had known for years. Ethel was dismayed at the portrayal of her family as obsessive about theater to the exclusion of all other interests, and her disapproval of The Royal Family never dissipated, even after the play's phenomenal success. Nearly 20 years later, when Kaufman asked her to perform in a World War II benefit re-}

Yet, revealing some humor within her outrage, Ethel criticized Kaufman and Ferber's accuracy, while owning up to her family's notorious drinking habits (by 1934 John's alcoholism was so severe that he resorted to drinking his wife's perfume when he ran out of liquor): "All that eating and eating done by the Cavendishes in the play," Ethel quipped. "As everyone knows, eating was never the Barrymores' besetting sin!"

The Barrymore siblings' fame was the culmination of two centuries of exceptional acting by their forebears, and the mystique of their dynasty contributed to the reverence that continues to surround the youngest descendants (including today's most well-known Barrymore, Drew, who has been in the limelight since her screen debut at age 2½).

Few other families, if any, can lay claim to an acting heritage of such longevity and merit. The Barrymore family tree has been traced back to the Lan clan of traveling English players—William Haycroft Lane and his wife Louisa Rouse both performed in and managed theaters in 18th-century England.
Their granddaughter had been a well-received actor on stages across the United States, and her husband, John Drew, was the lauded Irish comedian of his day. Their son John Drew II was known as the “first gentleman of the stage,” and their daughter Georgie Drew was an exquisite comedian. By the time she married the captivating English actor and playwright Herbert Blyth (who chose the name Maurice Barrymore when he took the stage on this side of the Atlantic) and gave birth to the now-renowned siblings—Lionel, Ethel, and John—the Barrymores had established themselves as the preeminent acting dynasty of the 20th century.

Families of Legend

While Barrymore was certainly the most commanding name on Broadway for more than half a century, it was by no means the only famous family of actors on the American theater scene, and Kaufman and Ferber would have had plenty of other models from which to choose.

The Booths, for example, were another renowned English acting family who emigrated and established themselves on the American stage. Junius Brutus Booth’s 1821 debut as Richard III in a New York production led to a long and popular American stage career, and each of his three sons became successful actors—most notably Edwin Booth, who was considered by many to be America’s finest tragedian. The youngest Booth brother, John Wilkes, plagued by relentless competition with his brother Edwin, achieved his own eternal notoriety with his final appearance at the Ford Theater in Washington, D.C., on April 14, 1865, when he assassinated Abraham Lincoln.

Each of these names carried a cachet of glamour throughout the first half of this century, when stage actors enjoyed the pinnacle of celebrity. Theater was still the ruling art form in this respect, not to be rivaled by Hollywood until the introduction of sound to film in 1927—a transition in which the Barrymores would play a significant role, as John famously decamped for Hollywood in 1925 and Lionel became the first actor to earn his entire, and sizable, income exclusively from film roles.

The prominence of stage actors like the Barrymores is especially impressive by contemporary standards, as the balance has shifted almost entirely to the film industry and few American stage actors enjoy such celebrated star status today. To their adoring public, the Barrymores represented all that was glamorous in the life of the traditional theater. Although recent generations of several acting families—among them the Redgraves and the Hustons—are well respected in their field, the Barrymores’ sovereignty remains unchallenged, a testament to the captivating quality of their performances, both on and off the stage.
While Jerome Kern and Oscar Hammerstein were up to their eyebrows in the work of bringing Shaw Boat to the stage, George Kaufman and I had decided to write a play about a glamorous theatrical family—no particular theatrical family, I hastily add, but an imaginary one that might be any family wedded to the stage. We did, however, plan to use one member of the Barrymore family, John; not as a whole, but bits of him. He was, of course, too improbable to copy from life. This family of ours was to have been in the theater for generations. It was to be the kind of stage family that thinks, talks, lives, breathes only theater.

It seems unbelievable now, but day after day, for eight months, George and I worked on the writing of The Royal Family. Every morning at eleven George would appear at my apartment in Central Park West. When I say eleven I mean, not one minute before or two minutes after—but eleven. We would start work. Lunch at one-thirty would be coffee and sandwiches or something equally portable, eaten on the march. My digestion is now a tottering wreck and George’s is, I believe, not that of a hired man at threshing time. But for my part it’s been worth it. I don’t regret a single sweatied hour. Better old age and soda-mint tablets than never to have written at all. The wonder is that we weren’t at each other’s throats after that long grind. We actually emerged good friends. Gallons of coffee had been drunk, tons of sandwiches consumed, miles of floor had been walked, typewriter ribbons had been worn to rags, Jed Harris had come into the scene as producer—and still we two collaborators remained friends.

So many people have asked me what actual method of work we had used in our collaboration on...

Minich, The Royal Family, Dinner at Light, and Stage Door. I don't know, really, except in a sort of way. Not that the process is any twilight sleep. It just works itself out, finally, with the inevitability of a huge and intricate jigsaw puzzle.

Whatever the definition of the process, it never has varied. The work is always done at my apartment or house (with an occasional brief or desperate leap into the fancied quiet of Brooklyn, Atlantic City, or Long Island).

Shaved, brushed, pressed, shined, Mr. Kaufman appears at eleven sharp, wearing (among other things) one of his inexhaustible collection of quiet rich ties. I sit at the typewriter; George stalks. I mention the tie. He says it's really nothing. A few moments' light conversation about this and that—the newest bit of gossip, last night's party, if any, this morning's newspaper headlines, the play that opens tonight. One of us says, "Let's write the play!" Paper, carbon, we're off. George jiggles the curtain cord; plays tunes with a pencil on his cheek which he maddeningly stretches out to a drum by poking it out with his tongue; he does a few eccentric dance steps; wanders into the next room; ties and unties his shoelaces. He is a confirmed shoestring-tier. In moments of irritation, puzzlement, embarrassment, or special thoughtfulness he stoops, unties his carefully tied shoelaces, and ties them again. He says they work loose.

No written word is safe from his gaze. A letter, telegram, or note left lying about will sooner or later be read by the Paul Pry of playwrights. He can't help it. His curiosity is, seemingly, overpowering. I thought of a plan to punish him for this habit. Before he was due to arrive at eleven I typed a telegram on a Western Union blank and placed it face up on my desk almost completely covered by another sheet of paper. Only one corner of the telegram peeped out, folded and creased as though it had been read and reread. There wasn’t enough of it exposed to make its reading possible, but one could see it was a telegram left open.

Immediately his gaze alighted on this. As we talked he stalked his prey. He would walk over to it and eye it hungrily. He would walk away from it, casting a longing glance over his shoulder. He bent his head and screwed it around to see if he couldn’t thus make out a word or two. Finally, “Damn it, what’s in this telegram?” he said. And picked it up.

I have heard that people’s jaws drop with surprise. I never had hoped actually to see this. I saw it now. This was the telegram I had typed: GEORGIE KAUFMAN IS AN OLD SNOOPER. His method of conserving his strength is carefully thought out, and it works. He concentrates. Aside from bridge (he is one of the most brilliant amateur bridge players in America) his interests are practically nonexistent outside the theater. The theater is his life. If there is a couch in the room—any room—he stretches out on it. He doesn’t stay there long, but very few people know the refreshment that comes to the muscles, heart, and arteries from five minutes of repose, repeated at frequent intervals. . . . He does almost no walking. From the Astor to the Music Box is a day’s jaunt for him. He eats prodigious quantities of chocolate candy and pastry, which gives him energy. He smokes and drinks almost not at all. He talks little. He hates to be interrupted or forestalled when he does talk.

His wit is devastating but rarely cruel. He is one of the most considerate of men. He rarely praises. In the years of our work together he has never paid me anything that could faintly be construed as a compliment. This makes me very cross indeed. . . .

I don’t know anyone in the world with whom I’d rather work.

Fireman’s Fund Foundation continues its 22-year commitment to A.C.T. and celebrates its eighth consecutive season of support for A.C.T. mainstage productions. Marin-based Fireman’s Fund Insurance Company ranks among the top 20 property insurers in the United States. Its spirit of giving and concern for society has been central to the Foundation’s mission since 1953. Overall, the Foundation has donated more than $29 million to nonprofit organizations nationwide and has made it a priority to address the needs of residents within Marin County, as well as throughout the greater Bay Area.

Through grants to cultural and artistic groups, the Foundation protects endangered creative resources and enriches the life of the community at large. “A wonderful classic like The Royal Family is part of a grand theatrical tradition that deserves to be regularly renewed and reviewed,” says Foundation Director Barbara Friede. “Clearly A.C.T. knows how to make classic humor new, vibrant, and appealing to today’s audiences. By cosponsoring The Royal Family at A.C.T., we are saying that laughter is a treasured constant in a world where the pace of change constantly challenges our sense of security. And through laughter we learn more about change, about ourselves, and about our fellow man.

“Our financial support for the performing arts goes hand in hand with the community’s use of culture as a vehicle for social growth,” adds Friede. “Great theatrical groups like A.C.T. use art to help humanity recognize its own potential for change.”

A dedicated A.C.T. subscriber and benefactor for 25 years, Mrs. Albert J. Moorman has attended virtually every A.C.T. production since the company’s inaugural San Francisco season in 1967. Mrs. Moorman’s involvement with theater began in 1948 soon after she and her husband moved to San Francisco. An inspired performance by Tallulah Bankhead then sparked a love affair with the Geary Theater which has endured for more than four decades.

Mrs. Moorman carries on the tradition of A.C.T. support her late husband initiated. A longtime partner of the law firm McCutchen, Doyle, Brown & Enersen, Mr. Moorman served on the A.C.T. Board of Trustees for many years and was a key figure in achieving A.C.T.’s early local fundraising successes. As chairman of the board’s nominating committee, he also helped create and sustain a level of excellence and service in A.C.T.’s principal governing body. In recognition of Mr. Moorman’s unflagging generosity and devotion to quality theater and actor training, A.C.T. has named one of its studios at 30 Grant Avenue in his honor.

For several seasons Mrs. Moorman has underwritten a fellowship in the A.C.T. Professional Theater Internship (PTT) program, which is a year-long professional apprenticeship for selected graduates of the A.C.T. Advanced Training Program. This season Mrs. Moorman sponsors Amelia Rosenberg, who has performed in A Christmas Carol and Machinal. “I am especially committed to supporting A.C.T.’s Advanced Training Program and PTT fellowships,” says Moorman. “These two programs help to ensure the future of quality acting, as well as the development of an informed and appreciative audience.”

Theater Artists Take Up Residence in the Conservatory

This winter several renowned theater professionals took up residence in the A.C.T. Conservatory, working with second-year students of the Advanced Training Program (ATP) on selected plays written in verse. Robert O'Hara, resident artist at New York's Public Theater and author of the play Insurrection, directed his "reconstruction" of Shakespeare's Henry V; Los Angeles-based director Kevin Kelley directed the Bard's Twelfth Night, and acclaimed translator and Village Voice theater critic Michael Feingold contributed three acts of his translation-in-process of Friedrich Schiller's Mary Stuart, which was brought to life for the first time under the direction of A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff. The plays were performed in studio productions in February.

Residencies such as these engender a spirit of collaboration and learning that benefits students and visiting artists alike. ATP students are deeply affected by in-depth exposure to the artistic sensibilities of visiting theater professionals, who in turn rediscover their craft through the eyes of aspiring younger artists.

"My experience at A.C.T. has been wonderful," remarks O'Hara. "It has been a joy to work with young actors who are still developing their abilities. Since their habits are not entrenched, they are ready and willing to dive into the unknown and open themselves up to new techniques. They also seem glad to work with someone from outside San Francisco who can bring additional viewpoints to the training they receive here.

"The residency has also been a learning process for me," O'Hara continues. "I actually chose to work on this version of Henry V in an educational setting, rather than in a professional theater. Even though production values are obviously limited in a student production, there is a greater degree of freedom and experimentation."

In addition to offering first-class training to almost 1,500 students each year, the conservatory has increasingly become the research and development branch of A.C.T., a testing ground for new work and potential mainstage productions. Plays under consideration for future staging in the Geary Theater are increasingly explored first in student productions and workshops in the conservatory. Students, who are cast in workshops alongside professional actors, benefit enormously from being a part of a playwright's editorial process, while A.C.T. has the opportunity to experience a new work before committing substantial resources to a mainstage production. An ATP studio production last spring of Machinal, for example, encouraged Perloff to slate the play for the current A.C.T. season. This season, students and mainstage actors also staged two readings of Sean O'Casey's Purple Dust and a fully mounted production of Harley Granville-Barker's Voyage Inheritance (directed by Albert Takazauckas) to explore the feasibility of full-scale productions of both plays. O'Hara and Feingold's recent visits to the conservatory served both to explore potential mainstage opportunities for their work—Insurrection and Mary Stuart, respectively—and to highlight
A.C.T.’s ongoing commitment to the development of new work by contemporary playwrights and translators. Perloff commissioned Feingold’s adaptation of Mary Stuart specifically for A.C.T. and used the student production to develop the script as it emerged from the writer’s pen.

A recent workshop and staged reading of Insurrection served a similar purpose. Although the play had already been performed at The Public Theater, O’Hara continued to develop his script in the workshop, reincorporating several scenes that had been cut for the New York production.

The ATP also devises student production schedules that encourage an artistic dialogue with A.C.T.’s mainstage repertory. As an artistic parallel to A.C.T.’s production of Leslie Ayvazian’s Singer’s Boy in May, for example, second-year students will showcase works by contemporary women playwrights in the ATP’s spring projects. The vital relationship between the conservatory and the mainstage will continue to evolve during future seasons, with increasing opportunities for involving both students and theater professionals in the crucial process of play development and exploration.

Get Ready for Studio A.C.T.

Now is the time to sign up for Studio A.C.T.’s spring session. Studio A.C.T. offers a wide range of evening and weekend classes in many aspects of the dramatic arts to people 19 and over, at all levels of interest and experience. Courses include scene study, audition technique, voice and speech, directing for actors, Shakespeare, musical theater, playwriting, singing, improvisation, and beginning to advanced acting. The next ten-week session begins March 24.

Actors with some prior performance experience are encouraged to audition for this session’s Advanced Studio Project—a staging of Isabel Allende’s recent memoir novel Paula. A Bay Area resident, Chilean author Allende has also written the international bestsellers The House of the Spirits and Eva Luna, among others. Project director Victoria Rue, whose credits include adapting novels by Joyce Carol Oates and Susan Miller for the stage, has adapted selected passages from Paula into a full-length studio production. Student rehearsals will be held twice each week and will culminate in two studio performances in early June for an invited audience.

New this session is a course in Meisner Technique led by Rachel Steinberg, offering instruction in a unique series of exercises designed to help actors develop a stronger instinctive foundation and access to emotional honesty. Created by Sanford Meisner of New York’s legendary Group Theatre, the Meisner technique has been useful for actors of all experience levels seeking to expand the truthfulness of their work.

Studio A.C.T.’s spring session includes another unique offering—a special Circus Class produced in collaboration with the Peninsula Children’s Theater Association. Renowned circus director Letitia Bartlett will direct students in Dr. Loco’s Traveling Caravan, an original, one-act musical circus play. Rehearsals will be held Friday evenings and Sunday afternoons beginning March 7, culminating in five performances April 12 and 13 at Cañada College in Woodside.

- Cash—one of the most familiar ways to give;
- Stocks, Bonds, and Mutual Funds—these make excellent gifts, especially if they have appreciated in value;

- Life Insurance—the cash value of your current or paid-up life insurance policy can benefit A.C.T.

Planned Giving

Many people who could not otherwise give to A.C.T. as generously as they would like find they are able to do so with a carefully planned gift. You can make a valuable long-term contribution to great theater by:

- Making a Bequest to A.C.T.—please let us know if you have included A.C.T. in your will or estate plans; or

- Creating a Life Income Charitable Trust with A.C.T.—by making a life income gift to A.C.T., you can gain: an immediate and substantial tax deduction, an increased annual income paid to you for life, freedom from investment worries, and avoidance of capital gains taxes when you transfer appreciated property to a charitable remainder trust.
