AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training in its conservatory, and an ongoing dialogue with its community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Managing Director Heather Kitchen, A.C.T. embraces its responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent its relationship to the rich theatrical traditions and literatures that are our collective legacy, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. A commitment to the highest standards informs every aspect of A.C.T.'s creative work.

Founded in 1965 by William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season at the Geary Theater in 1967. In the 1970s, A.C.T. solidified its national and international reputation, winning a Tony Award for outstanding theater performance and training in 1979. During the past three decades, more than 300 A.C.T. productions have been performed to a combined audience of seven million people; today, A.C.T.'s performance, education, and outreach programs annually reach more than 220,000 people in the San Francisco Bay Area. In 1996, A.C.T.'s efforts to develop creative talent for the theater were recognized with the prestigious Jujamcyn Theaters Award.

Since Perloff's appointment in 1992, A.C.T. has enjoyed continued success with groundbreaking productions of classical works and bold explorations of contemporary playwriting. Guided by Perloff and Kitchen, who joined the company in 1996, A.C.T. has enjoyed a remarkable period of unprecedented audience expansion and renewed financial stability. The company continues to produce challenging theater in the rich context of symposia, audience discussions, and community interaction.

The conservatory, now serving 1,900 students every year, was the first training program not affiliated with a college or university accredited to award a master of fine arts degree. Danny Glover, Annette Bening, Denzel Washington, and Winona Ryder are among the conservatory's distinguished former students. With the 1995 appointment of Melissa Smith as conservatory director, A.C.T. renewed its commitment to excellence in actor training and to the relationship between training, performance, and audience. The A.C.T. Advanced Training Program has moved to the forefront of America's actor training programs, while serving as the creative engine of the company at large.

In 1910, she left Ohio for a career in pictures. First she changed her name. Then she set out to change Hollywood.

American Conservatory Theater, in association with A.T.T. Onstage, presents THE FIRST PICTURE SHOW, a new musical that traces the rise and fall of the aptly named Anne First. A pioneer in the early days of Hollywood, she produced, directed and starred in a series of silent films until the invention of talking pictures — and the power of censorship — drove her out of show business. More than 70 years later, her granddaughter, an aspiring filmmaker herself, would make her the Hollywood legend she was always meant to be.

Over the past decade, A.T.T. Onstage has sponsored more than 50 world premieres of new plays or musicals in the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom. A.T.T. is proud of our association with American Conservatory Theater, and joins with them in promoting the art of communication in the communities we serve.

Time and Place
The First Picture Show spans the years 1895–1995 in the United States.
The First Picture Show is a work of fiction rooted in fact. The authors have placed invented characters alongside figures of history.

There will be one intermission.
FIRST LADIES

by Elizabeth Brodersen

Created in the freewheeling spirit of the early days of silent film, The First Picture Show reflects director David Gordon’s fascination with the simultaneous chaos of voices, images, and events that make up daily life and historical happening. Just a few of those voices are identified, amplified, and recorded on the soundtrack of conventional history, however, while others are edited out, forced to remain silent. As Ben says in The First Picture Show, “A lot of things happen and someone decides which ones become history.”

When beginning background research for The First Picture Show in 1996, David Gordon and Ain Gordon knew only that they wanted to write about the forgotten heroes of silent films. At the library in New York, however, Ain discovered a slim volume by film historian Anthony Slide, Early Woman Directors. “I thought, What women directors? There weren’t any,” he remembers. Suddenly, the most silent voices of the silent era came through, loud and clear.

A WOMAN’S WORLD

“During the first three decades of its existence,” observes Slide, “the American film industry was, in many ways, a woman’s world.” Between 1912 and 1920, more than 20 production companies were controlled by female stars. The 1920 Houghton-Mifflin volume of Careers for Women devoted an entire chapter to the occupation of film directing. And in 1923, Business Woman magazine observed:

> Excluding acting, considering solely the business possibilities, the positions are held by women in the Hollywood studios as typists, stenographers, secretaries to stars and executives, telephone-operators, hair-dressers, seamstresses, costume-designers, milliners, readers, script-girls, scenarists, cutters, film-retouchers, film splicers and other laboratory work, set-designers, librarians, artists, title-writers, publicity writers, plaster-molders, casting directors, musicans, film editors, executives and department managers, directors, and producers.

As “nickel madness” swept the country, the entrepreneurial souls who opened the first five-cent theaters were desperate for product. The field was wide open, and fledgling studios needed creative, ambitious people to make the movies demanded by a public enchanted by the radical new technology that made moving pictures possible.

FIRST DIRECTORS

The women of The First Picture Show represent an artful blend of theatrical fiction and historical fact derived from the stories of several of the silent screen’s leading lady film makers:

The Grande Dame of early film, Alice Guy Blacé (1873–1968) was a woman of formidable firsts: the first woman motion picture director in history; arguably the first director to capture narrative fiction on film; the first person to direct sound motion pictures and to produce multiple reels; one of the first directors to shoot in color, to use close-ups, masking, and double exposure and to run film backwards; and the first director in America to build her own studio. During her 24-year career, Blacé directed, produced, and/or supervised some 754 films, in every genre, including 300 feature-length films and more short films than D. W. Griffith.

Born in Paris, Alice Guy began as a secretary for cameraman Leon Gaumont. In 1895, she asked Gaumont to let her experiment with a new device that made still photos appear as a series of moving images. He agreed, on the condition that her amusement not interfere with her secretarial duties. She immediately wrote and directed La Fée aux Choux, based on a French fable, which was shown at the 1896 International Exhibition in Paris. The film was such a sensation that Alice was put in charge of Gaumont’s newly formed production company.

In 1907, Alice met and married Englishman Herbert Blacé, with whom she moved to the United States. While he was busy running Gaumont’s New York office, she organized, with her own money, the Solax Company in Fort Lee, New Jersey, considered “the best-equipped moving picture plant in the world,” which between 1910 and 1914 produced some 325 films, 35–50 of them directed by Mrs. Blacé, who ran the company with total authority.

Blacé refused to admit publicly that she was a feminist, but her films tell a different story: her western Winsome But Wise (1912) concerned a young female bounty hunter who captures a notorious bandit, while Two Little Rangers (1913) featured teenage girls packing pistols and saving the day. Madame Has Her Cravings (1906) explored the lengths to which a very pregnant woman will go to satisfy her desire for sweets, while The Call of the Rose (1912) was about a young opera singer who leaves her miser husband to pursue her career. And in her sci-fi fantasy In the Year 2000 (1912), women rule the world.

Herbert Blacé’s professional jealousy and marital infidelity eventually caused Alice to leave him and return to France in 1922, where she tried without success to continue her career. Many of her films were uncredited or bore her husband’s name, and by 1927, when she returned to the United States, most of them were already lost. She died, unremarked, in New Jersey in 1968.

America’s first native-born woman director, Lois Weber (1882–1939) contributed to nearly 400 films as director, writer, star, and/or producer. In 1908, Weber took a job working for Herbert Blacé at Gaumont’s studio in New Jersey; by 1916, she had become the highest-paid director of the silent era, earning $5,000 a week working for Carl Laemmle at Universal Studios. Universal built Weber her own studio in 1917, but in 1920 Paramount lured her away with a shocking $50,000-per-picture contract plus 50% of profits.

In the early years of this century, an overwhelming passion for moral and social reform swept America, as well-meaning “humanitarian progressives” became preoccupied with the moral education of children and the Americanization of immigrants. Originally a street-corner evangelist, Weber became the first film maker to recognize the potential of film to advocate social change through storytelling. She tackled such dicey issues as anti-Semitism (The Jew’s Christmas, 1913), the power of positive thought over disease (The Lepper’s Coat, 1914), Christian Science (Jewel, 1915, and A Chapter in Her Life, 1923), political corruption and religious hypocrisy (The Hypocrites, 1914), abortion (Where Are My Children? 1916), birth control (The Hand That Rocks the Cradle, 1917, about activist Margaret Sanger), capital punishment (The People vs. John Doe, 1916), and inadequate teacher compensation (The Blot, 1921).

Exhibitions of her films were often closed by the police, and Weber became a staunch opponent of film censorship. The Hypocrites character named Naked Truth, portrayed by an apparently nude young actress, incited riots in New York; Where Are My Children? faced censorship trials across the country, while the film’s publicity grossed Universal three million dollars.

Left behind by a Jazz Age more interested in light entertainment than heavy moralizing, however, Weber’s films began to fail at the box office. By the mid 1920s, she had lost her company, divorced her husband, and had a nervous breakdown. She made only one talkie, White Heat, in 1934, and died penniless in 1939.

Serial star-turned-director Cleo Madison also worked at Universal, the studio where women directors were most active in the 1910s. Determined to direct and produce her own vehicles, Madison deliberately made herself unbearable to work with until she got what she wanted—her own company, where she directed at least three films before writing and directing the five-reel feature Her Bitter Cup (1916), one of the earliest admitted feminist films. Much in demand (particularly as a director of westerns), she succumbed to nervous exhaustion in 1921 and disappeared from the screen by the late twenties.

Marion E. Wong, about whom very little is known, was the female president of the Mandarin Film Company, described in 1917 by Moving Picture World as “the only Chinese producing concern” in the country. Based in Oakland, the company was composed entirely of Chinese participants; Wong starred in its first (and only known) production, The Curse of Quon Quon (1917).

Nell Shipman wrote, starred in, and directed several features for Universal in the teens. Her God’s Country and the Woman (1916) was the first feature-length wildlife adventure film in history, probably the first feature-length film shot almost entirely on location, and the first ever to use an enclosed dark stage for its interiors.

Actress Margery Wilson (1898–1986), who did indeed play “Brown Eyes” in D. W. Griffith’s epic Intolerance, directed three features in the twenties and claimed to be the first person to make a film on location, “without a studio, without a single set” (although Nell Shipman reportedly beat her by two years). After marrying a man who, she said, “didn’t want me to do anything,” Wilson retired from motion pictures and supported herself writing self-help books until her death.

Also worth mentioning, although she does not appear in The First Picture Show by name, is San Francisco–born Dorothy Arzner (1900–79), the only woman director to make the transition to sound successfully. Denounced as an “exaggerated feminist” by one critic, Arzner made 17 films (four silent, thirteen with sound) between 1927 and 1943, with strong, unconventional female characters, the best of which concerned the struggle for equality between the sexes. Arzner was the only director in mainstream Hollywood to work with all the major female stars of her day. Her 1933 classic Christopher Strong launched Katharine Hepburn’s film career; The Wild Party (1929), Paramount’s first talkie (for which Arzner invented the boom microphone), introduced Fredric March; and Theodora Goes Wild (1936) made Irene Dunne a comedy star.

THE WRITERS

Another area in which women dominated the silent screen was that of scenario and script writing. During the teens, twenties, and early thirties, almost one quarter of the screenwriters in Hollywood were female, and half of all the films copyrighted between 1911 and 1925 were written by women.

One of the earliest female screen scribes was serial actress Gene Gauntier, who wrote more than 500 films in which she also starred, most for Kalem Film Studio. (While working briefly as a scenario writer for Biograph, she put in a good word for a young actor who really wanted to direct, and suddenly D. W. Griffith had a new career.) Like most silent screen actors, she performed all her own stunts; Gauntier, however, wrote them for herself. She retired from motion pictures to become a war correspondent in 1918.

The best-known female screenwriter was Frances Marion (1887–1973), a San Franciscan credited in her 50-year career with writing 325 scripts (136 produced) in every conceivable genre; she also directed and produced half a dozen films and became the first woman writer to win an Academy Award, for The Big House (1930); she won a second Oscar for The Champ (1931). After working as a reporter for the San Francisco Reporter (and becoming the first Allied woman war correspondent to cross the Rhine in World War I), she got her start in films as a stunt rider working for Lois Weber. Like Arzner, Marion made the transition to talkies with ease, and at the height of her career was earning $17,000 a week. Her resume includes some of classic films’ greatest hits: The Son of the Sheik (1926), Anna Christie (1930), Dinner at Eight (1933), Camille (1936), and Stella Dallas (1937), as well as 15 of Mary Pickford’s greatest successes.

LOST ART

By the mid thirties, the free and easy days when artists moved between acting, writing, directing, and producing—often on the same picture—were gone. The advent of sound squeezed most silent film directors out of the business, as younger, fresher talent was brought in; film budgets skyrocketed, and the consolidation of the major studios killed off most of the smaller independent film companies; while the departmentalization and unionization of the industry excluded women from most positions. Cutting-edge art became formulaic business, and by 1934 the “revised and enlarged” edition of Careers for Women no longer included a chapter on motion picture directing.

There are dozens, if not hundreds, of unheralded film pioneers (not all of them women) who deserve mention here as well as in history books. Most of their films have been lost, either disintegrated over time or ignored in attics. Interest in their work is growing, however, as evidenced by recent festivals at Berkeley’s Pacific Film Archive, Duke University’s Women Film Pioneers Project, and New York’s Museum of Modern Art. And, no longer utterly silenced, the voices of these unsung heroines can be heard, if only for a brief historical moment, in The First Picture Show.

"If You Don't Like It, Don't Look At It"

From the first motion picture shown in 1896 to the most recent homepage posted on the Web, the story of emerging technologies has been one of innovation followed by attempts to censor the ideas those technologies were designed to communicate. Below are a few observations on the ongoing battle to control artistic expression in the 20th century.

Motion pictures are going to save our civilization from the destruction which has successively overwhelmed every civilization of the past. They provide what every previous civilization has lacked—namely a means of relief, happiness, and mental inspiration to the people at the bottom. Without happiness and inspiration being accessible to those upon whom the social burden rests most heavily, there can be no stable social system. Revolutions are born of misery and despair.

—Mary Grey Peck, Motion Picture Committee, General Federation of Women's Clubs (1917)

GENERAL PRINCIPLES: No picture shall be produced which will lower the moral standards of those who see it. Hence the sympathy of the audience shall never be thrown to the side of crime, wrong-doing, evil, or sin. Correct standards of life, subject only to the requirements of drama and entertainment, shall be presented.

—Motion Picture Production Code of 1930

... without a redeeming feature to warrant their existence... ministering to the lowest passions of childhood... proper to suppress them at once... should be a law absolutely forbidding entrance of a boy or girl under eighteen... influence is wholly vicious... There is no voice raised to defend the majority of five-cent theatres, because they cannot be defended. They are hopelessly had.

—editorial about the new “nickelodeons” in the Chicago Tribune (1907)

Excessive flaunting of weapons by criminals shall not be permitted... Pictures dealing with criminal activities in which minors participate, or to which minors are related, shall not be approved if they tend to incite demoralizing imitation on the part of youth.

—Motion Picture Production Code of 1930

A CENTURY OF CENSORSHIP

1896 Alice Guy Blaché directs her first film, La Fée aux Choux.
1897 In New York, police arrest the exhibitor of the film Orange Blossoms, claiming that it outrages public morals.
1907 More than 1.5 million people per week attend movies in New York. A New York nickelodeon proprietor is fined $100 for “impairing the morals” of the children viewing The Great Thuce Trial. In November, Chicago passes the first law in the United States prohibiting “immoral” and “obscene” pictures and requiring the police department to review and “pass” pictures before they are shown.
1909 The National Board of Censorship is founded in May by picture makers in New York in an attempt to forestall government censorship. Within five years, the committee grows from nine to more than 100 members. By 1915, the board has 250 affiliated organizations nationwide.
1910 Frederic C. Howe becomes director of the National Board of Censorship. Under his guidance, the board is intentionally liberal with pictures, hoping to offset more conservative censors. Through 1914, the board approves 95% of the motion pictures reviewed.
1911–14 Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Kansas establish state boards of censorship. In 1914, Reverend Wilbur Crafts and Reverend William Chase introduce a bill in Congress to establish a Federal Motion Picture Commission to censor films. The bill is defeated, but others are introduced over the years. Chicago establishes a “pink permit” system that bars children from movies that receive this “adults-only” rating, the first in the country.
1915 Howe resigns. On February 8, D. W. Griffith's Birth of a Nation is shown in Los Angeles as The Clansman. It is immediately controversial and continues to be banned more frequently than any other film in history. Congressman Dudley M. Hughes introduces a bill to establish a Federal Motion Picture Commission as a division of the Bureau of Education, to review all films before distribution. The bill is defeated, as are similar proposals over the next six years. In Mutual Film Corporation v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, the U.S. Supreme Court denies motion pictures protection under the First Amendment to the Constitution.
1916 Maryland establishes a state board of censors. The National Board of Censorship changes its name to the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, adopting the slogan “Selection—Not Censorship—the Solution.” Its stated mission is to preview films and categorize them for the public. In July, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry (NAMPI) is formed.
1917 Lois Weber's The Blotting Paper, depicting events in the life of birth control advocate Margaret Sanger, is banned in New York.

A.C.T. WELCOMES RESIDENT ARTIST
CHARLES RANDOLPH-WRIGHT

A.C.T. has been awarded a $50,000 matching grant from the National Theatre Residency Program of Theatre Communications Group (TCG) and the Pew Charitable Trusts to fund a two-year directing, teaching, and playwriting residency for Charles Randolph-Wright. This distinguished and multitalented writer and director helmed Robert O'Hara's Insurrection: Holding History at A.C.T. last year and will bring Molière's classic farce Tartuffe to the Geary Theater in June to conclude A.C.T.'s 1998–99 season.

Artist residencies have become a vital component of A.C.T.'s efforts to develop new plays and establish ongoing relationships with emerging playwrights and theater artists whose visions enrich the breadth and diversity of work at A.C.T. Similar grants awarded to A.C.T. in the past have supported the residencies of playwrights Robert O'Hara (under the auspices of TCG and the National Endowment for the Arts) and Mae Wellman. The focus of O'Hara's residency, which concludes next season, is the development of his new play, -14: An American Maud, the third installment in a trilogy of plays (of which Insurrection is the second). Six-time Obie Award winner Wellman completed four new works during his fruitful tenure at A.C.T., including the libretto for The Difficulty of Crossing a Field, a music-theater collaboration among A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff, composer David Lang, and the renowned Kronos Quartet.

Randolph-Wright will serve as director, writer, and teacher during his residency from May 1999 through June 2001. He will kick off his tenure at A.C.T. with two weeks devoted to outreach efforts for Tartuffe before the production's rehearsal and will work closely with A.C.T. Outreach Manager Amy Vanacore to introduce his work to diverse groups throughout the city and greater Bay Area. Following Tartuffe, a significant amount of his time will be spent developing a new musical-theater piece for the A.C.T. mainstage, which he will direct during A.C.T.'s 2000–01 season. In addition, Randolph-Wright will direct an Advanced Training Program project, teach master classes, and work closely with Perloff and A.C.T.'s artistic staff on season planning and organizing workshops and readings of potential new plays. He will also have the opportunity to participate in A.C.T.'s public programs, symposia, and school programs.

"I am thrilled to welcome Charles back to A.C.T.," says Perloff. "His extraordinary production of Insurrection: Holding History brought a distinctly new, irreverent vision to the Geary stage, and his previous tenure here helped us further A.C.T.'s mission of nurturing theater that speaks to as diverse an audience as possible."

"With this residency, I look forward to expanding the representation of African-American artists at A.C.T., to exposing our students to Charles's boundless passion and sense of artistry as they develop their own talents, and to enjoying the presence of a long-term artistic collaborator who is truly invested in the range of work we do in this company."

In addition to his recent ventures at A.C.T., Randolph-Wright's eclectic body of work ranges from highly kinetic theater, including most recently Oak and Ivy at Arena Stage, Diva Is Dismissed at the New York Shakespeare Festival, and Homework (optioned by Twentieth-Century Fox), to numerous film and television projects. His productions have won numerous Image, Ovation, Drama-Logue, and Robbie awards, as well as five Garland Awards and a Bay Area Theatre Critics' Circle Award for Insurrection. Currently a producer and writer of the critically acclaimed Showtime television series "Linc's," he just completed the screenplay for the feature film White Chocolate, cowritten with John Leguizamo, and will produce and direct Bodilines, a film starring Vanessa L. Williams, for Showtime.

"My involvement with A.C.T. has produced the most magnificent collaborative work of my career," says Randolph-Wright. "From the moment I was given eight actors and a day to help Robert O'Hara rethink Insurrection: Holding History, I knew that I was doing more than simply directing a new play. We were hoping to change the landscape of A.C.T."

"The night of our first Insurrection preview, I rushed out at the end of the performance, hoping that I wouldn't be stoned by the audience. Two people approached me in the lobby to congratulate me: One was a young black man, the other an older white woman. They both had tears in their eyes. I want more of that. I want more of the dialogue that play encouraged. I watched the theater attract a darker and a younger audience. I didn't want to leave."

THE PACIFIC FILM ARCHIVE SHOWCASES
SILENT FILM IN MAY AND JUNE

A.C.T. salutes the Pacific Film Archive, one of the Bay Area's premier presenters of international film, which will showcase a special series of beautifully restored silent films during the world premiere run of The First Picture Show at A.C.T. Movie fans can enjoy the glories of silent film with live piano accompaniment by internationally renowned director G. W. Pabst on Friday and Sunday evenings, May 14-30. Pabst's sensual, psychologically subtle films are the height of sophistication from silent cinema's Golden Age: The Silent Street made Greta Garbo a star and features a wonderful performance by the great Danish actress Asta Nielsen. Brigitte Helm, best known for her role in Metropolis, plays a bored wife dallying with bohemian artists in Crisis. In the lyrical, elegant film The Love of Jeanne Ney, a diplomat's daughter and her Russian revolutionary lover traverse the Continent from the Crimea to Paris.

In June, visit the Pacific Film Archive on Sunday evenings for the delightful and rare serial Barrabas. Filmed on the Riviera in 1919, Barrabas is a seven-episode crime caper by French director Louis Feuillade.

The Pacific Film Archive is located at the UC Berkeley Art Museum on Durant Avenue near College Avenue in Berkeley. For more program or ticket information, please call (510) 642-1412.

SIMPLY THE BEST.

These theatres cause, indirectly or directly, more juvenile crime coming into my court than all other cases combined.

—a Chicago Judge (ca. 1907)

The movies are patronized by thousands of children who believe that babies are brought by the stork, and it would be criminal to deceive them.

—Photoplay magazine (1916)

SEX: The sanctity of the institution of marriage and the home shall be upheld. No film shall infer that casual or promiscuous sex relationships are the accepted or common thing. Adultery and illicit sex, sometimes necessary plot material, shall not be explicitly treated, nor shall they be justified or made to seem right and permissible....Lustful and open-mouth kissing, lustful embraces, suggestive posture and gestures are not to be shown. In general, passion should be treated in such manner as not to stimulate the baser emotions. Seduction [and] rape...are never acceptable subject matter for comedy. They should never be made to seem right and permissible....The word "abortion" shall not be used. The methods and techniques of prostitution and white slavery shall never be presented in detail, nor shall the subjects be presented unless shown in contrast to right standards of behavior. Brothels in any clear identification as such may not be shown. Sex perversion or any inference of it is forbidden.

—Motion Picture Production Code of 1930

Parents are going to have to realize that a computer without any restrictions to children is just as dangerous to their minds as a triple-X store.

—Indiana Senator Dan Coats, co-author of the Communications Decency Act (1997)

Blocking material leads to censorship. That goes for pornography and bestiality, too. If you don't like it, don't look at it.

VULGARITY: Vulgar expressions and double meanings having the same effect are forbidden. This shall include but not be limited to such words and expressions as chippie, fairy, goose, nuts, pansy, S.O.B., son-of-a. The treatment of love, disgusting, unpleasant though not necessarily evil subjects should be guided always by the dictates of good taste and a proper regard for the sensibilities of the audience.

—Motion Picture Production Code of 1930

Words like shit, fuck, piss, and tits. Words of which our mothers (at least some of them) would no doubt disapprove, but which by no means should be regulated by the government. But it's not just about dirty words. It's also about words like AIDS, gay, and breasts. It's about sexual content, and politically controversial topics like drug addiction, euthanasia, and racism.

—journalist Heather Irwin (1996)
OBSCenity: Obscenity in words, gesture, reference, song, joke, or by suggestion, even when likely to be understood by only part of the audience, is forbidden.

—Motion Picture Production Code of 1930

Each day millions of children exploring the World Wide Web risk exposure to hard-core pornography, and now it's time to protect them from exploitation. All too often their minds are permanently damaged and their innocence is lost because they are assaulted online by purveyors of smut.

—Randy Tate, executive director, Christian Coalition (1998)

Whoever knowingly and with knowledge of the character of the material, in interstate or foreign commerce by means of the World Wide Web, makes any communication for commercial purposes that is available to any minor and that includes any material that is harmful to a minor shall be fined not more than $50,000, imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both.

—Child Online Protection Act of 1998

I question whether in the end men will regard that as obscene which is honestly relevant to the adequate expression of innocent ideas, and whether they will not believe that truth and beauty are too precious to society at large to be mutilated in the interests of those most likely to pervert them to base uses. Indeed, it seems hardly likely that we are even today so lukewarm in our interest in letters or serious discussion as to be content to reduce our treatment of sex to the standard of a child's library in the supposed interest of a salacious few or that shame will long prevent us from adequate portrayal of some of the most serious and beautiful sides of human nature.

—Federal Judge Learned Hand (1913)

Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. (MPPDA). After 1922, no more states pass censorship legislation. Motion picture artists are required to accept morals clauses in their contracts.

1927 The first “talking picture” is made. In October, the Hays office establishes a Studio Relations Department to advise producers. It issues a list of “Don’ts and Be Carefuls,” 11 things that should not appear in films, including pointed profanity, sexual “perversion,” childbirth, and ridicule of the clergy.

1928 More than 100 U.S. cities have established censorship boards; censorship costs producers $3,500,000 per year.

1930 On March 31, the Hays office presents the Motion Picture Production Code, but many producers ignore its statutes.

1934 Catholic bishops set up a Legion of Decency, supported by other religious groups, to warn people away from immoral films. The film industry realizes it will have to follow the code.

1952 In Burstyn v. Wilson, regarding the Italian film The Miracle (considered “sacrilegious”), the Supreme Court unanimously grants First Amendment protection to motion pictures and appoints itself the final arbiter of film censorship. Over the following years, the court strikes down many grounds for censorship, including “indecency,” “immorality,” and being “too sexual.”

1968 November 1: formal classification of films by the new Code and Rating Administration begins. Films are classified as G, PG, R, or X. In 1968 and 1969, one-third of pictures submitted are reedited to achieve the desired rating. Eventually PG-13 and NC-17 ratings will be added.

1973 Deep Throat and The Devil in Miss Jones are among the 12 top-grossing films of the year.

1994 In July, Senator Jim Exon of Nebraska sees a “Dateline NBC” story about online pedophiles and mounts a campaign for Internet censorship.

1996 Congress passes and the president signs the Communications Decency Act, legalizing federal censorship of “obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, or indecent” material on the Internet.

1997 The Supreme Court overturns the Communications Decency Act in Reno v. ACLU.

1998 In March, New Mexico passes an Internet decency law banning material deemed “harmful to minors.” Other states attempt to pass similar laws. In October, Congress passes and the president signs the Child Online Protection Act (COPA). In November, a federal court temporarily enjoins enforcement of COPA.

1999 February 2: U.S. District Court Justice Lowell A. Reed, Jr., rules in ACLU v. Reno II that COPA violates the First Amendment guarantee of free speech. April 2: The case against COPA is heard in the Third Circuit Court of Appeals. The fight will probably continue to the Supreme Court.
