THE NEW 2000 MAXIMA. The numbers don’t lie. But what’s most impressive is that these performance gains were achieved on a powerplant already hailed as “simply the best V6 engine.” What these numbers don’t reveal are the hedonistic comforts of the new Maxima’s interior—including a new, available, custom-tuned, 7-speaker Bose® audio system with CD player and an even more generous bounty of rich Seton™ leather trim. Tally it all up and you’ll net out to the 2000 Maxima. And nothing else.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training in its conservatory, and an ongoing dialogue with its community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Managing Director Heather Kitchen, A.C.T. embraces its responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent its relationship to the rich theatrical traditions and literatures that are our collective legacy, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. A commitment to the highest standards informs every aspect of A.C.T.'s creative work.

Founded in 1965 by William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season at the Geary Theater in 1967. In the 1970s, A.C.T. solidified its national and international reputation, winning a Tony Award for outstanding theater performance and training in 1979. During the past three decades, more than 300 A.C.T. productions have been performed to a combined audience of seven million people; today, A.C.T.'s performance, education, and outreach programs annually reach more than 220,000 people in the San Francisco Bay Area. In 1996, A.C.T.'s efforts to develop creative talent for the theater were recognized with the prestigious Jujamcyn Theaters Award.

Since Perloff's appointment in 1992, A.C.T. has enjoyed continued success with groundbreaking productions of classical works and bold explorations of contemporary playwriting. Guided by Perloff and Kitchen, who joined the company in 1996, A.C.T. has enjoyed a remarkable period of unprecedented audience expansion and renewed financial stability. The company continues to produce challenging theater in the rich context of symposia, audience discussions, and community interaction.

The conservatory, now serving 1,900 students every year, was the first training program not affiliated with a college or university accredited to award a master of fine arts degree. Danny Glover, Annette Bening, Denzel Washington, and Winona Ryder are among the conservatory's distinguished former students. With the 1995 appointment of Melissa Smith as conservatory director, A.C.T. renewed its commitment to excellence in actor training and to the relationship between training, performance, and audience. The A.C.T. Advanced Training Program has moved to the forefront of America's actor training programs, while serving as the creative engine of the company at large.

FRANCIS BACON
A Retrospective Exhibition
12 June - 2 August 1999

Provocative and complex, his art was influenced by Picasso and surrealism. Talented and tormented, his life (1909-1992) was the recent subject of the film “Love is the Devil.” He was British painter Francis Bacon—one of the most important figurative artists of the 20th century. Explore his art in the first U.S. retrospective in more than a decade. Fifty-eight paintings from museums and private collections around the world—many on public view for the first time—are featured.

STAGEBILL 17
Prophets of Profit

by Elizabeth Brodersen

The characters of Charles Randolph-Wright’s Tartuffe may be part of the blue-blooded “400” who ruled African-American society during the 1950s, rather than high-born subjects of Louis XIV. Unlike their 17th-century counterparts, they may hum the tunes of Frank Sinatra instead of the operas of court composer Jean Baptiste Lully. Three hundred years after their invention, however, Orgon’s family remains hilariously vulnerable to the machinations of Molière’s charismatic predator in pious sheep’s clothing.

MATERIALISTIC EVANGELISM

The God business has become exceedingly lucrative in the latter half of the 20th century. Self-appointed religion watchdog James A. McNaught reported in 1980 that the top 11 evangelists in the United States (Garner Ted Armstrong, Oral Roberts, Pat Robertson, Jim Bakker, Jerry Falwell, Billy Graham, Rex Humbard, Jimmy Swaggart, Robert Schuller, James Robison, and “Rev. Ike” Eikerenkoetter) raised an estimated collective yearly gross of almost $400 million; by 1994 televangelism had become a $2.5 billion industry. From Tartuffe-like charlatans to sincere spiritual shepherds, these prophets of profit have made a fortune from spreading the Word to the Orgons of the modern era. A.C.T.’s own Tartuffe is based on several real-life religious figures who led the African-American evangelist pack during the 1950s.

I am materially poor but in spiritual terms I am the richest man in the world.”
—“Sweet Daddy” Grace
an organization worth $2 million, operating 362 Thankful Centers in 45 states and 16 countries, and lived in a 54-room castle (shipped from France, rebuilt in Detroit, and bought from a gangster for $25,000) that held $200,000 of furniture, jewelry worth $100,000, twelve silver sets, 482 suits, a $13,500 mink coat, three cars, twelve servants, and two adopted children—“all gifts from his worshipful subjects.” He claimed six million followers, who showered him with gifts in gratitude for answering the prayers in their letters—most of which were never opened, but dumped into a nearby river.

Obedience was also a primary tenet of Prophet Jones’s philosophy. His official handbook prescribed the proper way to bow and curtsy before the royal family, how to wire the Prophet in case of tumor (which he reportedly removed by telegram), and forbade such evils as social clubs, coffee, tea, gambling, smoking, dancing, marrying without his consent, and illegitimate children. Women were required to wear girdles in public and to own swim suits; steam baths should be taken often, a laxative once or twice a week.

Like Daddy Grace, the Rev. M. J. Divine professed to poverty, saying “I haven’t a dime.” His estimated assets of $3 million, however, include a $500,000 estate donated by a devoted follower and a 10-story Philadelphia hotel purchased with small bills for $460,000.
Most of Father Divine’s property was held in the name of his Peace Mission Movement, whose members were forbidden to smoke, drink, use makeup, go to the movies, or have sex (even with their spouses).
Father Divine raised eyebrows and headlines when he married a much younger Canadian woman, who (like many of his followers) worshipped him as the personification of God.

Although not in the same league as Daddy Grace, Prophet Jones, and Father Divine, several other figures of the era preyed on the vulnerable and devout: Master X made a small fortune selling lucky charms and offering marital advice to suffering followers. “Father” Elbert Smith of Detroit, a.k.a. James Douglas, served time in prison in Georgia, Indiana, Washington, D.C., and Michigan for swindling followers out of their life savings in fraudulent real estate deals. Posing as a priest, wearing a long black robe and a shiny cross, he operated a small mission where donations helped him carry on the “great work of God.” St. Louis tent-preacher Prophet Harvey Ambrose Green, a self-styled evangelist, was a “gaudy, robe-wearing character” who, instead of preaching, bragged during his “services” about his worldly goods. His specialty was the sale of “blessed” cabbage leaves.

Probably the most blatantly materialistic evangelist to have emerged during the first decades after World War II is the infamous Frederick “Reverend Ike” Eikenkoetter, whose weekly sermons were broadcast by some 1700 television and radio stations across America during his heyday in the early 1970s; he still operates an aggressive direct-mail operation that brings in an estimated $500,000 to $1 million tax-free dollars a month. “The Money Preacher,” as he is known, was the first African-American minister to harness the soul-saving and fundraising powers of television. Born in 1935 in Ridge land, South Carolina, he opened his first faith-healing Miracle Temple in Boston in 1964 and moved to New York in 1966.

Reverend Ike—who sports $1000 suits, dries gold chains and diamond rings, and reportedly owns 16 Rolls Royces (“My garages runneth over”), luxury homes on both coasts, and a velvet throne—is very clear about the message of his ministry: “The best thing you can do for poor folks is not be one of them... I am telling you, get out of the ghetto and get into the get-me’. You and me, we are not interested in a harp tomorrow, we are interested in a dollar today... Money is not the root of all evil. I say lack of money is the root of all evil.”

Fond of attractive young (male) aides, Reverend Ike was sued for sexual harassment in 1995 (like Tartuffe, he may be pious, but he’s human, too). Ike’s United Christian Evangelical Association now works out of inconspicuous offices in Massachusetts. The operation targets the elderly and poor, emphasizing those of African and Caribbean descent; Ike typically sends a letter containing a charm or a curse, telling the recipient to avert doom by mailing it back by the following day with a donation of $20 to $30 for his blessing. Although King Louis is no longer around to save latter-day Orgons and their families, the Suffolk District Attorney launched a fraud investigation into Ike’s operation earlier this year.

THE AMBIGUITY OF GOOD AND EVIL

Daddy Grace’s House of Prayer fed, clothed, housed, and provided pensions and burial insurance for the poorest people in the community. Reverend Ike employs the severely disabled to stuff envelopes with his “holy charms,” and the huge printing projects necessary to maintain his direct mail campaigns feed many people in the Boston area. Even today, after Jim Bakker, Jerry Falwell, Jimmy Swaggart, and many others have sufficed their crusades with scandal, eloquent and honorable promoters of the gospel continue to inspire millions of devout supporters worldwide.

Tartuffe director Randolph-Wright has said that he is “fascinated by the ambiguity of good and evil.” Although the wise Cléante believes that “sincerity and cunning art [can] be told apart,” and the saucy Dorine sees through Tartuffe’s mask from the very beginning, it is not so easy for the rest of us to distinguish the genuinely pious from the deliberately pernicious. Thank God we have Molière to help us recognize the “difference... Between true piety and hypocrisy,” and to remind us that “it is best to err, if err one must, / As [Orgon has] done, upon the side of trust.”

"EXISTENTIAL TWONESS"

While directing Robert O'Hara's Insurrection: Holding History at A.C.T. in 1998, director Charles Randolph-Wright realized that the story and characters of Tartuffe would be a perfect match for Insurrection's talented cast. Invited to recreate Molière's eternal comedy for A.C.T., he decided to stage the classic verse translation by poet laureate Richard Wilbur (developed with A.C.T. Founding Director William Ball in 1965 for Lincoln Center and produced as A.C.T.'s first production in the Geary Theater in 1967), to take advantage of the fact that these classically trained actors have an extraordinary facility with the poetry of Wilbur's text—which not a word has been changed for this production.

Randolph-Wright then set out to envision a world that would be unique to this particular company of African-American artists, a contemporary setting in which it would be believable that a wealthy family, isolated from the community, could be duped by Molière’s seductive “saint-in-residence.” Raised in the small town of York, South Carolina, he found the perfect setting for Tartuffe in a place and time very close to home: Durham, North Carolina, in the 1950s. Below are a few observations on the people and period that inspired tonight’s production.

During the 1950s, everything was changing for black Americans, especially after the Supreme Court decision to end segregation in 1954. It was a time of tremendous idealism; it was also a time of growing rebellion, especially in families: while the parents were listening to Sinatra and Nat King Cole, the kids were listening to bebop and jazz and attempting to dress like James Dean.

Having grown up in the South and gone to school at Duke, I know that Durham has one of the richest black populations in the country. Many black businesses—banks, insurance companies, etc.—were established and thrived there. We’re talking generations of prosperity: upper-class African Americans who are almost never portrayed in the media.

W. E. B. DuBois talked about the concept of “existential twoness”—how wealthy black families are isolated because they can no longer relate to the black community, yet they are not accepted by the white community. That describes Tartuffe’s family exactly: Orgon allows himself to be taken in by this person from another side of life because he is lonely and looking for a sense of meaning in his own life. Tartuffe’s implied promise of eternal salvation is therefore extremely attractive to him.
I see Tartuffe as a kind of “Reverend Ike meets Dracula.” In the traditional lore, a vampire cannot enter your house unless you invite him in, and I think that’s what happens with Tartuffe; time and time again, he is invited into situations in which he takes advantage of his victims’ own weaknesses and his vampirism takes over. That is not to say that I believe the church is evil. But there are certain people, in any profession, who will try to exploit every advantage.

Every person on this stage is representative of someone I know (a scary thought). My desire for this production is that everyone will recognize people from their own lives. This is a family that’s being taken for a ride, and, 300 years after Molière penned this play, I think we can all relate to how easy it is still to go on that ride.

HIGH SOCIETY

There is in [Durham, North Carolina,] a group of five thousand or more colored people, whose social and economic development is perhaps more striking than that of any similar group in the nation.

The Negroes of Durham County pay taxes on about a half million dollars’ worth of property or an average of nearly $500 a family, and this property has more than doubled in the last ten years.

The chief interest of any visitor who stayed long enough to notice would, however, center in the unusual inner organization of this group of men, women, and children. It is a new “group economy” that characterizes the rise of the Negro American—the closed circle of social intercourse, teaching and preaching, buying and selling, employing and hiring, and even manufacturing, which, because it is chiefly confined to Negroes, escapes the notice of the white world.

Whether designated as an “aristocracy” or a “fashionable social circle,” a “strictly discriminated upper class” of blacks existed throughout the South in both small towns and large cities. . . . They perceived themselves as keepers of high ideals, guardians of culture, and models of proper decorum to be emulated by other blacks. But being “too high on a hill” and too far removed from ordinary black folk made the aristocrats a natural target for “snipers” from below who sometimes regarded them as “stuck up and impossible.” . . .

That group known as the “old upper class” or “old families,” as distinct from those that later made up an economic elite, was drawn largely from the ranks of free blacks (some of whom owned slaves), house slaves and other privileged bondsmen, and certain immigrants from the West Indies. Class distinctions developed among antebellum free blacks in the South, ranging from those whose poverty, illiteracy, and...
MOLIERE AND TARTUFFE

Molière was born Jean-Baptiste Poquelin in Paris in 1622, the son of a wealthy tapestry merchant. He studied philosophy and law, then, at the age of 21, renounced the position at court which his father had secured for him, ran away with an actress, Madeleine Béjart, and founded with her a troupe of actors. His company toured the country under the protection of the Duke of Epernon, and Molière (the name he had taken in 1643) gained a reputation as a comic actor, writing and performing in his own plays.

In 1662 he married Armande Béjart, the young sister (or possibly even the daughter) of his former mistress Madeleine. By now the king, Louis XIV, had granted Molière's company a home at his theater in the Palais Royal. They had their first success there with Les précieuses ridicules in 1659, followed, notably, by L'école des femmes (1663), Le misanthrope (1667), and Le bourgeois gentilhomme (1671).

In 1664, during a week of court celebrations at Versailles, Molière held a private performance of his new play, Tartuffe; ou, l'imposteur. The court was amused, but Louis XIV, while recognizing the author's good intentions, forbade the play to be publicly performed. The Gazette de France applauded the king for having banned a dangerously anticlerical play.

Pierre Roulle, doctor of the Sorbonne and parish priest, wrote in a pamphlet: 'A man—or rather a demon clothed in flesh and dressed like a man, and a more notoriously blasphemous libertine than any hitherto known in history—has had the abominable impiety to conjure out of his diabolical spirit a dramatic work, intended for public display, which holds up the Church and its sacred duties to derision and scorn... For this sacrilegious outrage, he deserves public and exemplary torture—even by fire itself, harbinger of the flames of hell—in order to expiate so grave a crime of divine lèse-majesté, calculated to destroy the Catholic religion.'

In 1667, a revised version of Tartuffe had its first public performance, in Paris. The next day, the play was banned by the parliamentary president. The archbishop of Paris issued a proclamation: 'We hereby prohibit all persons in our diocese from presenting the aforesaid comedy, from reading it or hearing it read, either in public or in private, on pain of excommunication.'

The play was resumed, by royal decree, in 1669, when it opened with enormous success at the Palais Royal. Lured by the simmering controversy, the crowd seeking admission was reportedly so large that many people suffocated.

Four years later, while playing the title part in his play Le malade imaginaire, Molière died. The king had to intervene to allow his burial in holy ground.

WHY ORGANIC GARDENING ISN'T JUST A BUNCH OF MANURE.

Organic gardening is a lot more than natural fertilizer. And organic gardens do a lot more than make your yard look pretty. They help make the environment healthier. So let's dig in and see how you can help.

To conserve water, use water hose instead of sprinklers. The first step to creating an environmentally friendly garden is to compost. Composting not only helps produce the bacteria, nutrients and mulch plants need, it also reduces the amount of solid waste your home creates.

Another easy way to help the environment in your garden is to change the tools you use. For instance, instead of using sprinklers, try using soaker hoses. They leak moisture into the soil at slow rates, so water gets absorbed instead of running off. You may also consider using a rake, instead of gas-powered blowers. Use a rake instead of gas-powered blowers. Rakes use no fuel and give you some exercise. Next, think about the types of plants you plant. Consider over 15% of solid waste could be reduced if everyone who gardens composted. Earth Share 3400 International Drive NW Suite 2K (ADI)

The typical patrician family is home-centered, entertains frequently and lavishly, patronizes the opera, ballet, and concerts. The husband either is prominent in a profession or owns a prosperous business. The wife is a charming hostess, well-Posted (Emily) on all the social graces. The son and daughter belong to one of the national Greek-letter fraternities or sororities. They marry within their own set, but only after the girl has made her formal debut.

Today's high society is very different both from the early era when “blue blood” families were in social power and from the wild epoch of the 20s when heiress A'Lesia Walker Robinson gave her daughter a “million-dollar wedding” from the profits of her mother's hair-straightening devices. It has departed from the tradition of the Negro Renaissance when literary figures were feted in art salons such as the Dark Tower of the “mahogany millionaires.”

Today's social lights neither assume the airs of the early ancestor-worshiping gentry nor indulge in the lush and lavish party display of the Walker era. The new crowd zoomed to the top after the depression of the 30s and chipped off some of high society's polish and glitter. The war years gave many newcomers a chance to move into the upper brackets and become “pillars of society.”

her. It was her New England formality that alienated people. Black people really do have a chip on their shoulder about other black people succeeding. They tried to make her feel guilty, but she wouldn’t accept it.”

—Nat King Cole, by James Haskins

AMEN

Today Negro America is dotted with fine modern churches whose predominantly female congregations are led by men with tremendous charm as well as deep spiritual powers. Church census data shows that women membership in Negro congregations is 73 per cent compared to 62 per cent among white churches and inevitably the handsome minister is better able to fill the pews on Sunday, Chicago’s Rev. J. C. Austin . . . . puts it bluntly into these words: “Where there is no passion, there is no power. A minister must have power, he must have a flash in his eye and a spring in his step if he is to maintain his position as a leader. It is when he loses his restraint that he steps down from his standard of righteousness.”

—“Ministers with Sex Appeal,” Ebony (1949)

SOUNDS OF CHANGE

Ever since the middle of the 1940s, the average age of record-buyers had been dropping fast. But in the early years of the ’50s that average age had not yet skidded into the teens; the typical record-store customer was in his early 20s, a so-called young adult. To suit his taste, most popular music was still bland and “sophisticated.” . . .

But while the young adults were doing to Mario Lanza and Tony Bennett, the age level of record buyers kept plummeting until 1958, when teenagers were buying 70 per cent of all records. Simultaneously the world of popular music was inundated by a wild new sound called rock and roll, a thundering mixture of country-western music with Negro rhythm and blues.

—“From Pop to Rock,” The 1950s

For the first time in history, a Negro blues singer is the heavyweight champion of “Millionaire-row. Fats Domino is Number One gold-record winner for the period of 1948-1958. Chugging ahead with a phenomenal 16 disks that have sold over 1 million each, the 200-pound singing piano-pounder has come within four of beating out the all-time “Millionaire” Bing Crosby whose lifetime total is 20. Fats is so far ahead of the most well-known recording stars of today, that he’s lonesome. Lagging far behind the 30-year-old New Orleans rock-’n’-roll boss are Nat King Cole, Frank Sinatra, Harry Belafonte, and Johnny Mathis.

—“Millionaires,” Ebony (1959)

Question: Is it a sin to play rock-’n’-roll music for a living? Answer: . . . It seems to me that one must decide to either play gospel music or rock and roll. The two are totally incompatible. . . . The former serves to lift men’s souls to higher levels of reality, and therefore to God; the latter so often plunges men’s minds into degrading and immoral depths. . . . Never seek to mix the two.

—Rev. Martin Luther King, “Advice for Living,” Ebony (1958)

He has published ten anthologies for young actors, three of which were selected by the New York Public Library as "Outstanding Books for the Teenage." In January 1998 Carey Perloff awarded Slaight the first Artistic Director's Award for his contributions to A.C.T.

Bruce Williams (Director of Summer Training Congress & Community Programs) has had a 23-year working relationship with A.C.T., where he has taught in the Advanced Training Program (ATP), Summer Training Congress, and Studio A.C.T. (which he also administrates), directed numerous ATP, studio productions, and acted in more than 40 mainstage productions. Walsh received a Ph.D. in drama from the University of Toronto and taught theater history and dramatic literature at Southern Methodist University. His critical writings appear in The Production Notebooks, Re-interpreting Brecht, Strindberg's Dramaturgy, Theater Symposium, and Essays in Theater.

Visa U.S.A.

San Francisco-based Visa U.S.A. is proud to continue its support of A.C.T. as part of the company's commitment to performing arts that enrich the lives of people in the Bay Area and beyond.

For patrons of the arts, Visa is truly "everywhere you want to be." Visa supports a variety of events each year that entertain, excite, and educate customers. These events touch upon a wide variety of interests, ranging from musical performances to world-class exhibits and tours. In addition to being the preferred card of A.C.T., Visa is involved with the San Francisco Symphony, The Orchestra Partnership (TOPS), and "A Grand Design: The Art of the Victoria and Albert Museum"—the first traveling exhibition of selections from the London museum's legendary masterpieces (on view in San Francisco at the Legion of Honor February 13–May 9).

Visa card products, preference programs, and special offers help to bring the arts closer to thousands of patrons nationwide. Last holiday season, for example, preferred seating was available to patrons who used their Visa cards to purchase tickets to A.C.T.'s Christmas Carol.

KBLX 102.9 FM

Few radio stations in the United States have survived the many musical trends which have come and gone over the years. While radio stations, call letters, and formats continue to change daily, KBLX has endured as an industry leader and music innovator since 1979.

From the start, KBLX envisioned a format offering adult listeners a unique music experience not available anywhere else in the country. In contrast to top-40 and album-rock formats, KBLX began delivering a sound encompassing a wide range of music—from pop and R&B to jazz instrumental and soundtrack recordings. This carefully selected mix became known as "soft and warm, the Quiet Storm."

The station's popularity soared as more Bay Area adults tuned in and became familiar with KBLX's musical diversity. KBLX was the first to play the music of such artists as Anita Baker, Kenny G., Luther Vandross, Sade, Whitney Houston, Will Downing, Toni Braxton, and others, who are now considered the music superstars of the eighties and nineties.

Impressed with KBLX's success reaching adult demographics, other radio stations began copying the station's format, and "Quiet Storm," adult alternative, and new adult contemporary stations began to appear around the country. Acknowledged as a leader in contemporary music by the radio and record industries, KBLX continues to break new ground in its music and is committed to achieving musical excellence in the future.
