Where's The Soup?

With precision, pride even, the bowl is set before me. I am dumbfounded. A lobster medallion and delicate tips of asparagus rest in the bowl. There is however, no soup. Seconds later, the server ladles steaming asparagus soup into the bowl. The asparagus tips float around the lobster. Delicious.

Later, as I finish, it dawns on me, why there was no soup. Every element was perfect, the asparagus still with a hint of crispness, the lobster warmed through. There is only one way to do it right. Details make the difference.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training in its conservatory, and an ongoing dialogue with its community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Managing Director Heather Kitchen, A.C.T. embraces its responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent its relationship to the rich theatrical traditions and literatures that are our collective legacy, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. A commitment to the highest standards informs every aspect of A.C.T.'s creative work.

Founded in 1965 by William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season at the Geary Theater in 1967. In the 1970s, A.C.T. solidified its national and international reputation, winning a Tony Award for outstanding theater performance and training in 1979. During the past three decades, more than 300 A.C.T. productions have been performed to a combined audience of seven million people; today, A.C.T.'s performance, education, and outreach programs annually reach more than 250,000 people in the San Francisco Bay Area. In 1996, A.C.T.'s efforts to develop creative talent for the theater were recognized with the prestigious Jujamcyn Theaters Award.

Since Perloff's appointment in 1992, A.C.T. has enjoyed continued success with groundbreaking productions of classical works and bold explorations of contemporary playwriting. Guided by Perloff and Kitchen, who joined the company in 1996, A.C.T. has enjoyed a remarkable period of record-breaking audience expansion and renewed financial stability. The company continues to produce challenging theater in the rich context of symposia, audience discussions, and community interaction.

The conservatory, now serving 1,900 students every year, was the first training program not affiliated with a college or university accredited to award a master of fine arts degree. Danny Glover, Annette Bening, Denzel Washington, and Winona Ryder are among the conservatory's distinguished former students. With the 1995 appointment of Melissa Smith as conservatory director, A.C.T. revitalized its commitment to excellence in actor training and to the relationship between training, performance, and audience. The A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program has moved to the forefront of America's actor training programs, while serving as the creative engine of the company at large.
Come to A.C.T. for the most entertaining education in town. A.C.T. offers several ways for you to learn about the season's productions and to express your views on the issues they raise:

A MAP FOR THE SENSATIONAL

by Mark Lamos

One scholar has written: “Marlowe is merely a name associated with some texts written for performance in a theater of which we know little in general, and less specifically concerning these texts. Even the surviving written word is uncertain.” On the freedom implied by this uncertainty I began to conceive this production with a dramaturg, a group of actors, and designers in San Francisco in the year 2000.

Christopher Marlowe is a sensational but shadowy figure, yet each of his plays explores another way of making theater, another experiment in performance aesthetics. When we read or watch his works performed, we sense, says another writer, “that we are in the presence of that rare force: spontaneous creativity.” There is none of the sublimity of Shakespeare—even early Shakespeare. (Marlowe and Shakespeare were youths beginning their theatrical careers at the same time.) The iambic pentameter of Edward II is raw, grey, direct to the point of dullness, with no color, little use of metaphor or simile—it is poetry used like close-captioning for the Deaf on television. The viewer will listen in vain for Shakespearean flights of poetic fancy, or indeed wholeness, any sense of order, an organizing vision of the universe—the grounded ideology of Elizabethan England, the positing of a world in which God ordains circumstance. Even Titus Andronicus, the most bloodthirsty and sensational (and most Marlovian) of Shakespeare’s early attempts at pleasing the groundlings, has more hope. Look not for the humanistic balancing act of Shakespearean skepticism; instead, here is irony magnified a hundredfold. The obdurate, sexual, strutting, egotistical Marlowe painted sharded landscapes Shakespeare could only resist. Here was a protean force in the theater whose experiments and agendas would have magnificently enriched Renaissance literature and performance practice—if the playwright had lived past his youth. (Like Joe Orton, Marlowe was murdered.)

What Marlowe writes isn’t exactly literature—it is a map for the sensational. You almost hear him thinking, as a young writer in an age of violence and exploration, What can I dare to do?

Though there were no “homosexuals” per se in Elizabethan England, there was plenty of homosexual activity. Marlowe may or may not have participated in it. We have no way of knowing. However, we do know by looking at his surviving texts that almost every one of them features homosexual desire.

More importantly, he refused to moralize history. He saw history as chaos; he understood that we are circumscribed, indeed imprisoned, within history by our personalities and our circumstances. In that sense, we have no choice, and we plunge to our fates like the characters of The Agamemnon, helpless in the grip of personal forces beyond our control. He demonstrates a “thrilling equipoise” (as another critic has noted) of contrarieties, creating an electrifying theatrical effect. Marlowe’s characters are switch-hitters. Perhaps that’s another term for Realists?

I am using Marlowe’s text to examine and display questions about masculinity and gender and domination and victimization. This production investigates homophobia, male bonding techniques, and the eroticism of violence—particularly violence between men. After all, all we can do is interpret, since we have no way of knowing what was originally meant or received in the performance of this text. I am reading Marlowe’s play for myself first, then for my time (as I perceive it subjectively), and then for this wonderful theater company in San Francisco, California. Like Marlowe’s characters, I have no choice here. This is all I can do.

Irony, Salaciousness, Violence. A refusal to moralize history. The lack of an ethical center. Contradiction: male vs. female, public responsibility vs. private yearnings, etc. These are the themes and means by which Marlowe creates a nihilistic theatrical universe. In this play politics intersect with sexual desire. Each nullifies the other.

Perhaps the most modern thing about Edward II is its depiction of the phobic. Michael Kaufman explains:

A phobia is one means by which the ego tries to cope with anxiety. Homophobia is a means of trying to cope, not simply with our unsuccessfully repressed, erotized attraction to other men, but with our whole anxiety over unsuccessfully repressed passive sexual aims, whether directed toward males or females. Homophobia is not merely an individual phobia, although the strength of homophobia varies from individual to individual. It is a socially constructed phobia that is essential for the imposition and maintenance of masculinity. A key expression of homophobia is the obsessive denial of homosexual attraction; the denial is expressed as violence against other men. Or to put it differently, men’s violence against other men is one of the chief means through which patriarchal society simultaneously expresses and discharges the attraction of men to other men.

Though the deadly barons of Edward II claim that their hatred of the king’s favorite, Gaveston, is based on his lower-class status, it seems clear that Mortimer, Edward’s primary nemesis, is afflicted by masculine jealousy and homophobia and a kind of masculine role playing that demands retribution (the conflicted “straight” man’s fear and consequent hatred of the homosexual).

It is this aspect of Marlowe’s drama that most interests me.
Marlowe was happy in his bushied muse,
Alas unhappy in his life and end.
Pity it is that wit so ill should dwell,
Wit lent from heaven, but vices sent from hell.

—Anonymous, The Pilgrimage to Parnassus (1602)

The Cambridge undergraduates who wrote The Pilgrimage to Parnassus, a play produced just nine years after Christopher Marlowe's death, recalled a contradictory figure. His fellow writers celebrated the reach and beauty of his art; Dramatist George Peele called him "Marley, the Muses' darling for thy verse." Shakespeare praised the author of the magical line "Who ever loved, that loved not at first sight?" Poet Michael Drayton proclaimed that Marlowe "Had in him those brave translunar things. / That the first Poets had." Ben Jonson remembered him as the maker of "Marlowe's mighty line."

Marlowe's detractors were equally adamant about his vices. Government spy Richard Baines denounced Marlowe as a proselytizing atheist, a counterfeiter, and a consumer of "boys & tobacco." During the months leading up to Marlowe's death, playwright Robert Greene publicly predicted that God would soon strike him down. Protestant ministers took the killing of Marlowe, in a tavern brawl at the untimely age of 29, to be an act of divine vengeance. Marlowe had "denied God and his sonne Christ," wrote Thomas Beard, "but see what a hook the Lord put in the nostrils of this barking dog."

The contradiction remained manageable so long as Marlowe remained a minor figure. When he finally joined the canon of major English authors during the 19th century, however, the question of his moral character had to be confronted. Victorian critics constructed a romantic Marlowe whose blasphemies signified an impulse acceptable to modern readers—free thought, antiphilistine-ism, the quest for transcendence. Edward Dowden and A. C. Bradley defined him as a prototype of the modern poet who lived for his art, suffered for his excesses, and died young. His immorality, like that of Byron and Shelley, took on a redemptive purpose; his atheism manifested the artist's unrelenting search for truth.

This high-minded notion continued to dominate the conversation about Marlowe until quite recently. During the last two decades, historians have shown that Marlowe's work formed an important forum for expression of the dissident viewpoints of atheists, homosexuals, foreigners, and the poor in early modern England.

EARLY LIFE AND WORK

Christopher Marlowe was born in February 1564, a few months before Shakespeare. His father was an impoverished shoemaker in the cathedral city of Canterbury. The Protestant Reformation of religious learning created an historic opportunity for Marlowe to receive a classical education at the prestigious King's School and at Cambridge University. Upon receiving his master's degree, Marlowe was expected to become a Protestant minister, but he soon struck out on a different course. His path-breaking translation of Ovid's Amores announced his intention to be a "teacher of desire" in the Ovidian tradition. Like his Roman mentor, Marlowe reached out to an audience of eager sexual neophytes:
...far hence be the severe:
You are unapt my looser lines to hear.
Let maids whom hot desire to husbands lead
And rude boys touched with unknown love, me read.

Marlowe began to write for the public stage around the time of his graduation. Just a decade before, in 1576, a London acting company had erected the first purpose-built playhouse since Roman times. The new theaters were widely denounced as dens of iniquity, and university graduates at first declined to write for them. Marlowe’s Tumburlaine the Great, however, put the playhouses on the map. The hero of Marlowe’s early masterpiece is a peasant-warrior who, as the title page of the 1590 quarto puts it, “from a Scythian Shepherd... became a most puissant and mighty monarch.”

The secret of Tumburlaine’s success was poetry. Before Marlowe’s debut, popular English playwrights had written in plodding rhymed couplets. Marlowe introduced a blank verse line that sounded eloquent and melodic, but also captured the rhythms of common speech. Over the long run of the English Renaissance, his initiative succeeded brilliantly. Marlowe’s mighty line provided the metrical basis for a new canon of vernacular classics written by Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, and John Milton.

Shakespeare soon followed Marlowe’s lead. His early trilogy about the reign of King Henry VI was strongly influenced by Marlowe’s conqueror hero, and contains many verbal echoes of Tumburlaine. Edward II in turn borrows passages from Henry VI and adopts the basic plot formula of Shakespeare’s trilogy, in which overmighty nobles and a strong-willed queen destroy a weak king. Marlowe’s extraordinary variation on Shakespeare’s plot formula was to place the homosexual relationship between King Edward and his base-born favorites at the center of the action.

BEDFELLOWS MAKE STRANGE POLITICS

Unmarried individuals in early modern England ordinarily had a same-sex bedfellow until they married, usually in their late twenties or early thirties, when they could afford to head a household. This venerable custom, together with the Renaissance exaltation of male friendship, and the recovery of Greek and Roman gender systems, served to legitimize homoerotic affections in Marlowe’s England. Yet the medieval-Christian impulse to demonize homosexual acts persisted regardless. The so-called bugsers, pathics, ingles, catamites, Ganymedes, and sodomites who committed these acts were subject to capital punishment in the eyes of the law, even though the law, in this area, was rarely enforced.

The law’s neglect stemmed from misrecognition. The distinction between eroticized male friendship and sodomy turned on social

by Paul Walsh

When Edward II (1284-1327) ascended the throne of England in 1307, he inherited a realm beset with difficulties. Though his father, Edward I, had subjugated the Welsh and declared himself Lord of Scotland, peace was not on the horizon. The Scots continued to assert their independence under their own monarch, Robert the Bruce, and ravaged the borderlands between England and Scotland in the name of Scottish independence. Decades of war with Wales, Scotland, and France had emptied the royal coffers despite years of debilitating taxation that now threatened civil unrest. England needed a monarch who would work to solidify political and social cohesion at home. Instead, in the 23-year-old Edward II, it got a monarch who by all accounts was more attentive to the whims and desires of such favorites as his boyhood friend Piers Gaveston than to the demands of state. At the end of his reign, Edward was remembered as an idle and decadent king, who relied too heavily on the advice of his favorites and thought too little of the needs of the country.

One of the first things Edward did as king was to recall his dear friend Gaveston from the exile imposed upon him by Edward’s father, the late king, who had been nervous about the influence of the charismatic Gascon squire over his son. Upon his return, Edward the son showered Gaveston with titles and favors, including the earldom of Cornwall, a title formerly reserved for members of the royal family. Such signs of royal favor angered the barons and peers of the realm, who feared and resented the power enjoyed by this upstart who, though not even of noble birth, was said to flaunt his position as if he were “a second king.”

In June 1308, Edward was compelled by the barons to

A.C.T. MASTER OF FINE ARTS PROGRAM VENTURES INTO NEW TERRITORY

The exceptional talents of the 24 third-year students of the A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program were showcased in March at the Magic Theatre in successful public productions of adventurous works by Robert O'Hara and Mac Wellman.

The world premiere production of the A.C.T.-commissioned -14: An American Ma(u)l, written and directed by O'Hara (whose Insurrection: Holding History played at the Geary Theater in 1998), was hailed by the San Francisco Weekly as “energetic . . . [with] a lunatic intensity . . . a swirling mixture of history, myth, humor, and anger” and by the San Francisco Examiner as “a bracing mix of . . . confrontational verse and irreverent intelligence.” The West Coast premiere of Girl Gone, written by Mac Wellman and directed by Peter Wallace, ran to packed houses every night. San Francisco Frontiers praised Girl Gone for its “sheer theatrical excitement, artistic innovation . . . and an all-out commitment to the performative moment . . . [This is] theatrical gold worthy of the downtown spotlight.”

BANKAMERICA FOUNDATION HONORS A.C.T.'S EDUCATION AND COMMUNITY PROGRAMS

In February A.C.T. received a generous $25,000 grant from the BankAmerica Foundation to support A.C.T.'s education and community outreach expansion initiatives. Following BankAmerica Foundation's 1998 grant of $50,000, which enabled A.C.T. to hire its first full-time outreach manager, Amy Vanezis, the new gift will help A.C.T. continue its ongoing efforts to diversify audiences and to facilitate coalition building with other Bay Area organizations. The company's increased emphasis on education and audience development exemplifies A.C.T.'s continuing commitment to serving as a community-responsive arts organization.

One key component of A.C.T.'s education and outreach initiative entails expanding the company's popular ArtReach program, a series of in-school theater workshops conducted by A.C.T. visiting artists and conservatory students. With the support of this BankAmerica Foundation grant, A.C.T. intends to incorporate ArtReach workshops into the curriculum of a larger number of schools and community-based organizations. A pilot program of expanded outreach workshops took place this season, during the run of A Christmas Carol, at community centers throughout San Francisco and at Castlemont High School in Oakland, as well as with student groups who attended the recent Master of Fine Arts Program productions of -H: An American Ma(n) and Girl Gone at the Magic Theatre.

BankAmerica Foundation is the charitable arm of Bank of America, which has been doing business in San Francisco since 1904. The bank and its foundation share a mission: to build strong communities. Together, last year they contributed $94.7 million to nonprofit agencies across the nation. In addition to promoting job creation, affordable housing, education, and environmental preservation, BankAmerica Foundation is a leading supporter of artistic expression and cultural achievement.

A.C.T. WELCOMES NEW BOARD TRUSTEES

As the governing body of A.C.T., the board is responsible for the overall artistic, educational, and financial integrity of the institution. James V. Risser has since 1985 served as director of Stanford University's John S. Knight Fellowship Program, which each year awards mid-career sabbatical fellowships at Stanford to outstanding professional journalists from the United States and abroad. A practicing attorney before turning to journalism, Risser was Washington Bureau Chief of the Des Moines Register for nine years before joining the Stanford faculty in 1985. He has twice won the Pulitzer Prize for national reporting, in 1976 and 1979, earned the Raymond Clapper Memorial Award for Washington reporting in 1976 and 1978, and garnered the Thomas L. Stokes Award for environmental reporting in 1971 and 1978. Risser served on the Pulitzer Prize board from 1990 to 1999 and was a member of the board's drama committee, which each year recommends to the full board the winner of the Pulitzer Prize in drama. Risser is a member of the Society of Professional Journalists, the Society of Environmental Journalists, Investigative Reporters and Editors, the Gridiron Club of Washington, and the Editorial Advisory Board of the Reuters Foundation of London. He has taught in the Stanford in Washington Program and has been a visiting lecturer at Wells College, Mills College, Drew University, Bowdoin College, and the University of Nebraska.

Risser and his wife, Sandi, have been active theatergoers for nearly 40 years on the East and West coasts, and Sandi was a board member of TheatreWorks while they lived on the Peninsula. They have been A.C.T. subscribers since moving to San Francisco in 1995.

He currently serves on the board of directors of Habitat for Humanity San Francisco. Since joining the A.C.T. Board of Trustees in June 1999, Dobranski has taken a special interest in A.C.T.'s fundraising efforts, particularly with respect to individual and corporate donations, by joining the board's development committee.

Dobranski and his wife, Della, are dedicated A.C.T. subscribers. Their two daughters were students in the A.C.T. Young Conservatory. "I am especially pleased to have commenced my service on the board at a time when A.C.T.'s repertoire is at its most innovative and exciting," said Dobranski.
Step Over to the Marines Memorial Theatre for STOMP

A.C.T. is pleased to announce a special arrangement with the producers of STOMP—the unique combination of percussion, movement, and visual comedy that has taken the world's stages by storm—which begins performances May 2 at the Marines Memorial Theatre. This will be the first resident company of STOMP outside New York City.

Thanks to the producers of STOMP, A.C.T. patrons can reserve premium seats to designated performances of STOMP, and for every seat you reserve, $5 will be donated by the producers back to A.C.T. to benefit our community outreach programs—including such signature programs as our Student Matinee Series and smaller, intensive programs like the Tenderloin Outreach Project. All told, A.C.T.'s community programs deliver live professional theater and theater training to tens of thousands of children every year.

Tickets to STOMP went on sale February 27. To obtain the A.C.T. priority seating and to ensure that A.C.T. receives STOMP's donation, call the Marines Memorial Theatre Box Office (toll free) at (877) 771-6906, or visit the Marines Memorial Theatre Box Office (609 Sutter Street at Mason) in person, and mention the A.C.T.-STOMP promotion at the time of purchase.

See the Geary from the Inside Out

In response to popular demand, A.C.T. has been offering behind-the-scenes tours of the Geary Theater since November. The first series of tours offered to the public since the reopening of the landmark theater in 1996, Geary Theater backstage tours begin at 10:30 a.m. on select Wednesday and Saturday mornings. The approximately 75-minute tours ($8 for the general public; $6 for subscribers; $4 for students and seniors; $2 for children aged 6–12) are a wonderful opportunity for adults and children to see how theater magic is made! Every tour includes backstage areas otherwise closed to the public.

The tour is wheelchair accessible, but we ask that you let us know by phone in advance if you need specific accommodations. Each backstage tour is limited to 15 people. For tickets, call the A.C.T. Box Office at (415) 749-2ACT or visit us on the Web at www.act-sfbay.org.
CAREY PERLOFF (Artistic Director) assumed artistic leadership of A.C.T. in 1992. Perloff has since led the company to unprecedented success, including the receipt of the prestigious 1996 Jujamcyn Theaters Award and the triumphant reopening of the Geary Theater following its $28.2 million restoration. Known for directing innovative productions of classics and championing new writing for the theater, Perloff’s work at A.C.T. includes last season’s acclaimed production of Euripides’ Hecuba, the American premieres of Tom Stoppard’s Invention of Love and Indian Ink, and her triumphant revival of Brecht/Weill’s Threepenny Opera, which played to sold-out houses last fall. Other work at A.C.T. includes Friedrich Schiller’s Mary Stuart (which traveled to Boston’s Huntington Theatre Company in March), Harold Pinter’s Old Times, Stoppard’s Arcadia, Tennessee Williams’ Rose Tattoo, Sophocles’ Antigone, Strindberg’s Creditors/Checkmate’s Uncle Vanya, David Storey’s Home, the world premiere of Leslie Ayvazian’s Singer’s Toy, and the Geary Theater inaugural production of Shakespeare’s Tempest, which featured the Kronos Quartet. Troublesome Reign, continued from page 28 assent to Gaveston's banishment and appointed him lieutenant in Ireland. Within the year, however, Gaveston had been recalled. After his recall in 1309, Gaveston's unpopularity, and the favor shown him by the king, resulted in the formation of a baronial committee known as the Lords Ordainers. In 1311 they drafted the "Ordinances of 1311," which among other things demanded the renewal of Gaveston's banishment. The favorite withdrew briefly to Flanders, but returned again by the end of the year. In the conflict following his return, Gaveston was captured by a party of the barons, imprisoned, and summarily executed near Warwick on 19 June 1312.

The execution of Gaveston, the first of many political executions in England during the 14th century, deepened the conflict between Edward II and the barons. In fact, Edward was so angered and aggrieved by the event that a lasting enmity arose between him and certain of the leading barons, especially the earls of Warwick and Lancaster.

Some years later, Edward found new favorites in the powerful landowner Hugh le Despenser and his son. As the Despensers (or Spencers) grew in wealth and power as chief advisers to the king and the main architects of administrative reform in England, they, too, incurred the resentment of the barons, who set out to destroy them. In 1321 the Despensers were tried by the barons, disinheritied, and sent into exile. The king retaliated by fielding a great army and, in short, defeated the rebel barons. A great many barons were executed by the crown, including the powerful earl of Lancaster. Hugo le Despenser and his son returned to their place at Edward's side.

Shortly after ascending the throne in 1307, Edward had gone ahead with the political marriage arranged by his father some years before to Isabella, daughter of King Philip IV of France. With her Edward had four children, including the future king Edward III. Queen Isabella, too, seethed with resentment against the state of England and the power of the Despensers. From her voluntary exile in France, she arranged with a number of baronial exiles—including her paramour Roger Mortimer, lord of Wigmore, who was said to have seduced the queen with "illicit embraces"—to put an end to the rule of favorites in England. They gathered an army and sailed to England in September 1326, set on deposing the English king in favor of his son.

In England the rebels were joined by a great multitude of barons and other allies. An assembly of the rebels, which termed itself a parliament and in which the commons were duly represented, met in January 1327 and drew up articles of deposition declaring Edward II incompetent to govern and choosing Edward III as king. Despite attempts by the barons to legalize their rebellion, they knew they could not allow Edward to remain alive. Edward II, the first English monarch to be deposed, was brutally murdered in April 1327.
investing the king with the stigmatic regalia of an anal sodomite, his tormentors prepare him for the horrible punishment described in Holinshed's Chronicles: "They kept him down and withal put into his fundament an horn, and through the same they thrust up into his body an hot spit." There is biblical precedent for this affliction; the Lord had rained down fire on the inhabitants of Sodom. The grim overtones of homosexual rape, with Edward forever fixed in the pathic position, drives the moral home: the unrepentant criminal was consumed by his own lust. Yet Holinshed reports that Edward resisted this role. The "frightful noise" that he made "as the tormentors were about to murder him," disturbs the story of his annihilation; many listeners "understood by his cry what the matter meant."

Marlowe's Edward II prolongs this disturbance. The demonic Lighborn orders the two jailers, Matrevis and Gurney, to "get me a spit, and let it be red hot." Then, still following Holinshed, he requisitions "a table and a feather bed" to pin Edward down. At this juncture, the killers encounter a fresh obstacle. Holinshed's victim remained asleep until the murderers had set about their work; his counterpart in Edward II forces himself to stay awake in order to confront his fate. Lighborn clearly intends for Edward, who has been denied sleep for the past ten days and nights, to doze off, and does his best to coax him into it; but Edward wants to "see the stroke before it comes" so that "my mind may be more steadfast on my God."

Edward succeeds in this contest. The executioner's plan goes awry when Edward cries out to God for assistance—described in Holinshed as taking place "as the tormentors were about to murder him." At the very least (and it is much better than nothing) Marlowe's protagonist refuses to go along with his own annihilation.

David Riggs is professor of English at Stanford University. He has published a biography of Ben Jonson and is currently writing the life of Christopher Marlowe.

TORREFAZIONE ITALIA
CORPORATE SPONSOR

Torrefazione has previously sponsored the world premiere of The First Picture Show and Mary Stuart at A.C.T. A division of Seattle Coffee Company, Torrefazione Italia is a classic Italian coffee roastery. It was founded in 1986, when Umberto Bizzarri brought his family's recipes for blending and roasting traditional coffees to the United States from Perugia, Italy, and opened his first café in Seattle's historic Pioneer Square, where he served his classic brews to a growing number of coffee aficionados. Now his coffee can be enjoyed in more than 19 café locations and is served at fine restaurants and other establishments across the country.

Torrefazione Italia has always been an enthusiastic supporter of the arts, especially of organizations like A.C.T. whose passion for theater is mirrored in Torrefazione’s passion for fine coffee. A.C.T. is proud to serve exclusively Torrefazione Italia coffee at the Geary Theater.

TAKE STOCK IN A.C.T.
There are many creative ways to give to A.C.T. All are tax deductible and offer A.C.T. donors a tremendous opportunity to:

Avoid capital gains taxes on the sale of appreciated stock;

Create an income-tax deduction equal to the fair-market value of the stock at the time of transfer; and Generate a more significant gift than if you were just writing a check.

Additional ways to contribute to A.C.T.'s success include:

Cash—one of the most familiar ways to give;

Property—most real estate and personal property qualify as tax-deductible charitable gifts; and Life insurance—the cash value of your current paid-up life insurance policy can benefit A.C.T.

PLANNED GIVING
Many people who could not otherwise contribute to A.C.T. as generously as they would like find they are able to do so with a carefully planned gift. You can make a valuable long-term contribution to great theater by:

Making a bequest to A.C.T.—please let us know if you have included A.C.T. in your will or estate plans; or

Creating a life-income charitable trust with A.C.T.—you can gain an immediate and substantial tax deduction, increased annual income paid to you for life, freedom from investment worries, and avoidance of capital gains taxes when you transfer appreciated property to a charitable remainder trust.

AT THE THEATER
The Geary Theater is located at 415 Geary Street. The auditorium opens 30 minutes before curtain.

A.C.T. Merchandise
Posters, sweatshirts, t-shirts, nightshirts, mugs, note cards, scripts, and Words on Plays are available for purchase in the lobby and at the Geary Theater Box Office.

Refreshments
Bar service is available one hour before the performance in the lower lobby and on the second balcony level. Reservations for refreshments to be served at intermission may also be made, at either bar or in the main lobby, during that time. Food and drink are not permitted in the auditorium.

Beepers!
If you carry a pager, beeper, cellular phone, or watch with alarm, please make sure that it is set to the "off" position while you are in the theater. Or you may leave it and your seat number with the house manager, so you can be notified if you are called.

Perfumes
The chemicals found in perfumes, colognes, and scented after-shave lotions, even in small amounts, can cause severe physical reactions in some individuals. As a courtesy to fellow patrons, please avoid the use of these products when you attend the theater.

Emergency Telephone
Leave your seat location with those who may need to reach you and have them call (415) 439-2396 in an emergency.

Latecomers
A.C.T. performances begin on time. Latecomers will be seated before intermission only if there is an appropriate interval.

Listening Systems
Headsets designed to provide clear, amplified sound anywhere in the auditorium are available free of charge in the lobby before performances. Please turn off your hearing aid when using an A.C.T. headset, as it will react to the sound system and make a disruptive noise.

Photographs and recordings of A.C.T. performances are strictly forbidden.

Rest rooms are located in the lower lobby, the balcony lobby, and the uppermost lobby.

Wheelchair seating is available on all levels of the Geary Theater. Please call (415) 749-2478 to arrange to notify the house staff of any special needs.
