THE NEW NISSAN 300 ZX
PACE CAR FOR THE PERFORMANCE GENERATION.

Very few automobiles in the world have generated the excitement and emotional involvement associated with the Z car. Keeping this in mind, it's not surprising to read that Motor Trend Magazine called the 300 ZX, "the best all-around Z car ever built." For 1986, Nissan has taken one more step in the thoughtful evolution of a classic. At the heart of this Z is a 3-liter V6 that is actually eight inches shorter and 15 percent lighter than the 280 ZX. Yet the turbo model puts out 11% more power, a rousing 200 horsepower. That power gets to the road by way of an electronic control system that gives you the most efficient transmission of power at any speed. Combined with shocks you adjust electronically from the cockpit, the result is startling.

In addition, an electronic monitoring system keeps track of spark plugs that fire 42 times a second at 5000 RPM and a microcomputer controls the fuel injection system making the Z a marvel of functional electronic wizardry.

Outside, fender flares, housing wider tires, were integrated into the body. The air dam was extended and rocker panel extensions were added to reduce air turbulence under the car. All this, plus a wider track results in better handling than before. Inside, a choice of electronic or analog instrumentation is offered, along with every conceivable luxury, including a resounding 92-watt, 6-speaker stereo system. The 300 ZX, turbo or fuel injected. Once you get inside a Z, a Z will get inside of you.

How to handle inane questions about Bushmills.

Bushmills drinkers have had more than their share of questions: “What is it?” “Why is it special?” “How do you drink it?” And you’ve certainly done your level best to answer politely: “It’s whiskey from the world’s oldest distillery.” “Triple distilled for an uncommonly smooth taste on the rocks, neat, or with water.”

But if your patience is wearing thin, we’ve two suggestions. Give equally inane answers. Like: “It’s chicken soup—I’m contagious.” “It’s brewed by elves.” “I drink it by osmosis.”

Or, better yet, buy them a Bushmills. It’s guaranteed. After one sip, their questions will answer themselves.

AN APPRECIATION OF SIR NOEL COWARD

Noël. You are concerned exclusively with life in the present.

Your people are artists of living. Your heroes and heroines are those brave souls who embrace their aliveness, who dare to exist as they are, not as others would have them. You do not bother us with biographies, psychologies or complex metaphysics. Live life, your people tell us. Hang on for the ride and stay with it, wherever it may take you. The adventure is what it's really all about, isn't it? And the clinging to one another, for without each other there isn't much to cling to in the universe, is there?

How contemporary and modern you are, Sir Noël. Born in 1900, you are a true child of this century. You came of age during World War I and your experience of its aftershocks colored your vision forever. You embraced the 1920s as a celebration of the temporal and became the decade's spokesman. No wonder your characters exist outside of time, for they epitomize a way of living in which the moment is all. Who wants to conceive of life as a series of time-payments, variable interest rates, flexible economics or advances in state-of-the-art technology when there are so many more important issues to resolve—issues of fulfillment, destiny, compromise, surrender? Just try to discover Elroy's profession or Amanda's financial base—I dare you. And who cares? Your people aren't bothered with basic issues of survival, are they? They simply are. And how fortunate for us!

In Private Lives you touch upon a fantasy most of us hold dear yet are loath to expose for public scrutiny: our great need to surrender to an all-embracing intimacy with a partner who awakens within us a long-buried deep, deep core, a "center" which once touched makes us feel so much more alive, so much more responsive, so whole. Isn't that really what your great observation of the human condition, your Private Lives is all about? And the maddeningly glorious struggle to come to terms with the truths which exist between two kindred souls who are truly complete only when in one another's company?

Do Amanda and Elroy avoid responsibility by running off together to Paris, or do they fulfill their destinies by rediscovering one another? I wonder if you had any ideas on that one, Sir Noël, when you first set pen to paper and wrote this intimate comedy for yourself and Gertrude Lawrence in 1930. These two engaging creatures seem to have seized your imagination, pure and simple, and their story, this whimsical rhapsody of an adventure, seems simply to take care of itself.

If, in looking at Private Lives, I need to forget conventional narrative devices, am I merely to observe character in action? Yes. And the pattern of that action—recognition, resistance and surrender—plays itself out over and over again to create a theatrical architecture of perfect symmetry and balance.

And your language, Mr. Coward, your language! Your people disguise and reveal their feelings with such an elliptical use of the word? And the beauty of those words, so cunningly chosen to appear artlessly casual, then so skilfully crafted into speeches that say so much by saying so little. That throwaway elegance of the spoken word in which the most spontaneous remark reveals the profoundest workings of the human heart.

Your language encapsulates the way many of us would like to live and behave. It embraces a world-view many of us hold dear in our secret hearts. And it ignites in us the desire to chuck it all and run away with someone to live happily ever after—even if it means engaging in a life-long and never-ending contest of wills.

"Private Lives" director Sabin Epstein.

Dear Sir Noël, what an extraordinarily refreshing writer you are! You seem to have banished forever the conventional devices of dramatic narrative. Gone, primarily, is the traditional use of time. Never in one of your plays is a secret from the past revealed at a choice moment to disrupt the present and cause chaos in the future. No, that's not for you, Sir Noël. You are concerned exclusively with life in the present.

Your people are artists of living. Your heroes and heroines are those brave souls who embrace their aliveness, who dare to exist as they are, not as others would have them. Dear Sir Noël, you do us proud. You make us laugh; a rare talent, that, to amuse. And you make us long for a world in which romance is, once again, the single most crucial, most consuming cause in the universe. When love is all, then the world can indeed be very, very enjoyable. True, Mr. Stoppard and Mr. Pinter carry on in your tradition, but you were, and always will be unique, one of a kind, singular. Glory be to us all for your precious gifts. And thank you.

Noël Coward and Gertrude Lawrence in the original 1930 production of "Private Lives".

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Noël Pierce Coward was born in Teddington, a London suburb, in 1899. He made his professional stage acting debut at the age of twelve as Prince Mussel in The Goldfish. For the next sixty-two years, until his death in 1973, he worked continuously as an actor, singer, poet, author, playwright, screenwriter, lyricist, composer, producer, director and entertainer. As the darling of the café society, he gave style to a whole era, inventing the 20s just as Oscar Wilde had invented the 90s.

Coward's first play to be produced, I'll Leave it To You, appeared in 1920, but it was not until 1924, when he played the leading role in The Vortex that his reputation as a playwright and actor became fixed. Over the remaining six years of the decade, thirteen of his plays and revues appeared on London and New York stages, including Fallen Angels (1925), Hay Fever (1925) and the romantic operetta, Bitter-Sweet (1929).

In 1930 Private Lives opened with Coward and Gertrude Lawrence in the roles of Elyot and Amanda. This smashing success was followed by Design for Living (1933), Tonight at 830 (1936), Bitter Spirit (1941)—which set a record for the run of a non-musical production in England—and Present Laughter (1946). Coward's World War II and post-war work showed a decline in his playwrighting powers. Nude with Violin appeared in 1946, the same year John Osborne's Look Back in Anger took London by storm, and was not well received. During these years and to the end of his life, Coward increasingly turned his attention to his cabinet act, performing in Las Vegas and on the Continent. He also appeared in a series of television shows with Mary Martin and acted in and wrote for film.

In addition to his prodigious output of more than fifty plays, sketches and musicals, Coward wrote two volumes of autobiography, Present Indicative and Future Indefinite, a book of poems, two travel memoirs, several volumes of short stories, a novel, and over one hundred songs, including "If Love Were All," "Mad Dogs and Englishmen," "I'll See You Again," and "Someday I'll Find You."

Noël Coward was born with a talent to amuse, which he shared freely with his friends and his audiences. He wrote: "Now, when the present is overshadowed and the future is less assured than ever, the gift to amuse is not to be dismissed too contemptuously. Who can truly say there is more truth in tears than in laughter?"

A.C.T. PRESENTS
"PASSION CYCLE"

On March 19 a special theatrical event comes to the American Conservatory Theatre. That marks the day previews for Passion Cycle begin.

Passion Cycle is a significant event for a number of reasons. Tied to coincide with the Easter holidays, this series of mystery plays deals first-hand with Christian faith as it was practiced in the middle ages. The plays come to us virtually unaltered since the mid-fifteenth century, in verse form.

The plays of the Passion Cycle are but one part of what has come to be known as the Wakefield Mystery Plays. The other parts are the Nativity, Resurrection and Ascension; together they tell the story of the public life of Jesus of Nazareth.

And what quaint and terrifying stories they are! Because the plays represented a populist response to scripture rather than religious education imparted from on high, their mood is both awe-filled and unflaggingly authentic. A.C.T. will endeavor in every way to remain faithful to the plays' spiritual values in its landmark production.

The history of the manuscript itself is a fascinating one. The last known medieval performance of the Mystery Plays was in 1576. Through marriage, political machination and Protestant suppression, the thirty-two-play cycle managed to stay intact but were forgotten until they were sold at a Towneley, England family auction in 1814.

Though they are sometimes referred to as the Towneley Plays, scholars agree that most of the mystery plays, as well as the anonymous Augustine monk who served as their scribe and final editor, were in some significant way connected with the town of Wakefield. Hence the Wakefield Cycle of mystery plays.

"Christ in the Cross with Three Angels" (detail), 1525, by Albrecht Dürer.

It was probably Wakefield, with its strong network of guilds and craftsmen, that sponsored the first productions of the plays in the twelfth century. For hundreds of years, tradesmen traveled from town to town with makeshift wagon stages, collaborating in the creation of the unique and compelling stories audiences will once again enjoy this Easter season.

Those early productions probably had more in common with today's Punch and Judy shows than with a conventional evening of theatre in twentieth century San Francisco, but we hope to recreate, as faithfully as possible, the excitement and raw vitality that audiences in the middle ages must have experienced.

Passion Cycle opens March 25 and continues Monday through Saturday through April 19. Tickets to all performances are now on sale and may be purchased at the A.C.T. box-office or by phone at 673-6440.
