Be Confident Before Your Next Home Purchase

3 witnesses share their story to finding a new manufactured home with just the right fit by Clayton Homes (Paul Content)

Downsize-or upgrade-con can mean more freedom from lower taxes to fewer expenses. An off-site built or manufactured home, as well as because it's built in a facility and then transported and assembled on site, may be just what you need.

Next, review our home plan for the same convenience. According to the National Association of Homebuilders, an article by more than 30 million people domicile in manufactured housing. Similarly, the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau reports that approximately 28% of manufactured housing households are traveling to a home.

Of-site-built homes make sense in order to accommodate for a number of reasons, including affordability, quality, style, and the potential for lower utility costs. These coupons than have their homes inspected.

Country dreams come true

The couple's decision to purchase a modular home came as a surprise to many, as they had never owned or even considered one before. However, after visiting several modular home manufacturers, they were sold on the idea of owning a home that was built off-site and could be customized to their specific needs.

In August 2019, Hurricane Michael moved toward the northwest of Florida, including Panama City. The couple evacuated to Tallahassee before the storm made landfall in a category 4 storm. When they returned home, they found that their home had suffered little to no damage, which was a huge relief for them.

Diane and Terry purchased their first manufactured home in 1991. It was close to their mother. They lived in the home for 26 years, but after their mother passed away in 2016, the couple decided to downsize. They eventually sold the home, located in a beautiful neighborhood in their property overlooking the bay. The new home was built with all the amenities they wanted, including energy-efficient features they needed in order to meet their budget. A new off-site-built home that you live in

The couple worked with a Clayton home consultant to customize their new home, selecting such features as a covered porch, a large deck, and a beautiful view. They are pleased with their new home and have no regrets about their decision to purchase a manufactured home.