Shopping for the perfect gift for your grandchildren means more than simply buying the "t" item off the shelf. With the right present, you can find a unique way to connect with your loved ones and stay involved in their lives. Each other, a well-chosen gift can help your young grandchildren learn something new or develop a skill—while having fun for ready to find that extra-special gift? Keep these five tips in mind when holiday shopping. Prepare to see the joy on your grandchild's face when they unwrap the ultimate present.

Here’s your checklist for giving the perfect gift this holiday season.

1. Give a gift as unique as they are
   For this year's present that won't get lost in the back of a closet, look for something distinctive that stands out from the crowd. A hand-on game or creative activity that encourages discovery will be a welcomed change from the same old sing-along or story. Plus, when the gift sparks different experiences, your grandchildren will reach for it again and again—and think of you each time.

2. Give a gift tailored to their interests
   On your hit list. Ask about their hobbies, interests, or recent purchases in the family? Do your grandchildren already have an interest and that they're interested in. Whenever, this specific interest is, a related gift will enhance what they know and their passions. They’ll also feel personally invested in your gift. Who knows what you'll inspire them to create?

3. Give a gift that keeps on giving
   With a monthly subscription, the fun doesn’t end after the wrapping paper is cleared away. Your grandchildren gets an exciting new package to open each month and a regular reminder that you care about them. It’s an easy way to stay involved and up to date with their lives, especially if you live far away.

4. Give a gift that changes with them
   Yes, we wish that it stays the same forever, but your grandchildren are bound to develop new hobbies as they get older. Toys today, someone believes, will become a thing of the past. Use this to your advantage: look for a gift that offers a wide variety of projects for each age group and interest. This way, as your grandchild grows, your present grows with them by providing exciting, brand new activities.

5. Give a gift designed for learning
   It’s never too early to share the love of learning with your entire family. Look for a gift that encourages creativity and curiosity in science, technology, engineering, art or math without making it seem like a chore. The possibilities are endless from building their own solar system to learning Food Science to making Tiffany glass. You might even teach a thing or two yourself!
