

Communication skills

Throughout your dissertation your concern to ensure that the clarity and consistency of your thinking is perfectly expressed in your writing will be reflected in your care and attention to detail as you write. Consequently, you can argue not only that your dissertation adequately demonstrates how effectively you can present your ideas and develop your arguments in written form, but, equally important, the attention to detail that such a flawless piece of writing involves.

Even more, you can probably argue that this project has taught you how writing places you at the centre of your ideas; that it's not just sufficient to recycle the opinions of others. The experience of researching and writing your dissertation has made you realise that you must think for yourself and get to the heart of your ideas so that you can express them clearly and consistently. In the process you have learnt that you do, in fact, have a voice of your own and how to organise your writing and thinking to let it come through.