

What you have learnt

What have you learnt from researching and writing your dissertation?

- you have learnt how to manage all the complex demands involved in such a large project and how to sustain your motivation right through to the end;
- you have learnt about how creative you can be;
- how best to organise yourself to generate, capture and develop your own ideas;
- how to analyse concepts and problems so you see things more clearly;
- how to synthesise and adapt ideas to find solutions to problems;
- how to play devil's advocate and think flexibly to find better ways of doing things;
- how well you can write, that you have a voice of your own and how to organise your writing to let it come through;
- but, above all, you have learnt how to think for yourself.
