

Eurylochus' First Speech

'Odysseus! You are hard and tireless, but the rest of us are not as you. We are ordinary men and we are exhausted and grieving. Take pity on us and allow us to stay here awhile. And look to the sky: it does not promise good sailing weather. We would soon be lost again at sea if we dared to venture forth into this foggy ocean now.'