

Euripides Medea

Useful Links

Below you will find links to a range of useful online resources (though see also Further Reading for links to translations).

Integrate the resources into your teaching or share the links with your students for independent study or revision.

Greek Tragedy in General

Massolit (www.massolit.io) is a newish and fantastic site with short filmed lectures from top academics. You will need to register, but there is an enormous amount of classical material in general, as well as on tragedy.

For an online journal devoted to Greek drama, please visit www.didaskalia.net/.

Video clips on various aspects of Greek tragedy from academics Professor Edith Hall (King's College London) and Dr Felix Budelmann (Magdalen College, Oxford).

A page on ancient drama, written by Mark Damen.

A page on ancient drama, from Cambridge University.

A page on ancient drama. This is a site from the USA with lots of interesting information.

Medea

At Massolit there are two courses on Medea. The first is by Professor Judith Mossman, now at the University of Nottingham. There are six films, roughly ten minutes each (<https://www.massolit.io/courses/163>). The second course is by Dr Lucy Jackson, which is also a six-film course (<https://www.massolit.io/courses/77>).

The Archive of Performances of Greek and Roman Drama has already been mentioned (www.apgrd.ox.ac.uk). There is much information here about earlier performances of the play.

There are some fantastic (and important) vase paintings of Medea (see e.g. <http://www.theoi.com/Gallery/M26.1B.html> and <http://www.theoi.com/Gallery/O28.7.html> but it is probably easiest to use a search engine).

JSTOR is an extremely useful resource.