Description of Religion & Philosophy

The academic study of religion and philosophy helps you to develop your critical thinking, reading, and writing skills, your ability to communicate effectively with those of different cultures, and your understanding of the importance of compassion in engaging an increasingly diverse and complex world in a responsible and meaningful way. There is a clear interdisciplinary character to the academic study of religion and philosophy, as it draws upon the various resources and distinctive approaches of, for example, archaeology, the visual and performing arts, economics, history, literature, and the behavioral, natural, political, and social sciences. Thus, as a Religion and Philosophy major at CBU, you are encouraged and equipped to understand and appreciate the worldviews and faith commitments of others, and to examine your own.
