ABOUT TONIGHT’S PROGRAM

Dear Listener,

Today’s program affords us the opportunity to stretch our imaginations when confronted with the term “chamber music.” We’d like to pose the question: did Bartók, as he began to compose today’s designated Milestone work, consciously tell himself that he was about to write a piece of “chamber music”? We doubt it. Because by 1937, the boundaries between musical genres had long been blurred. String quartets and piano trios were being performed in large, public concert halls. And since the time of Beethoven, no one questioned that a composer’s most important works might actually be composed for just a few players. Still, the brilliance and popularity of Bartók’s work, combined with its novel, groundbreaking synthesis of percussion and keyboards, truly affords it landmark status in the history of music for small ensembles.

It should be mentioned as well that Bartók, influenced by his extensive experience in the field of folk music research, had encountered what was likely a wide variety of percussive sounds that seeped their way into his creative soul. Even in his six string quartets, which were completed all but the final one at the time of the sonata, every attempt is made to include percussive sounds by means of string techniques—some of them actually invented by Bartók himself. So this sonata for Bartók’s own instrument, the piano, is augmented sonically in the same way, but now with two percussion players performing on seven different instruments. We wonder if Bartók would someday have composed a string quartet with percussion!

Surrounding the Bartók on today’s program are two works which could have garnered Milestone status had they not had such competition this season. One is Dohnányi’s ever-popular string trio, the first of its kind in the 20th century, and Tchaikovsky’s perennial favorite, the Souvenir de Florence. If we could add a word about the Tchaikovsky: please take the French title literally. Souvenir is a memory only, and throughout this work, you’ll feel the chill of Russian winter. But soon, you’ll be warmed by balmy Italian breezes. This is true at the outset of the first, third, and last movements, all quintessentially Russian with Italian interludes, while the beautiful slow movement is, from the start, a warm Italian aria with some gusts of icy Russian wind in its middle.

Enjoy the performance,

David Finckel              Wu Han
ARTISTIC DIRECTORS
Ernő Dohnányi was among the 20th century’s foremost composers, pianists, teachers, and music administrators. Born on July 27, 1877, in Pozsony, Hungary (now Bratislava, Slovakia), he inherited his musical interests from his father, a talented amateur cellist, who gave him his first lessons in piano and theory. At 17, Dohnányi entered the newly established Franz Liszt Academy in Budapest, the first Hungarian of significant talent to do so. He graduated from the Academy in 1897, and toured extensively as a pianist for the next several years. From 1905 to 1915, Dohnányi taught at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik. He returned to Budapest in 1915, becoming director of the Academy in 1919 and musical director of the Hungarian Radio in 1931. He served as conductor of the Budapest Philharmonic for the 25 years after 1919 while continuing to concertize at home and abroad and remaining active as a composer. In 1944, he left Hungary, moving first to Austria, then to Argentina, and finally settled in Tallahassee in 1949 as pianist and composer-in-residence at Florida State University. Though in his 70s, Dohnányi’s abilities remained unimpaired, and he continued an active musical life. He appeared regularly on campus and in guest engagements; his last public performance was as conductor of the FSU Symphony just three weeks before his death. He died in New York on February 9, 1960, during a recording session.

The Serenade for Strings, Op. 10 of 1902, one of the earliest works of Dohnányi’s creative maturity, combines a folkish sense of melody with mastery of form and harmonic sophistication. The composition opens with a March, which, in the fashion of serenades from Mozart’s time, returns toward the end of the last movement to tie the piece together.

SOMETHING TO KNOW: Dohnányi’s string serenade is in the style of those by Mozart and Beethoven: a suite with a number of short but contrasting movements.

SOMETHING TO LISTEN FOR: Dohnányi recalls the Classical serenade by starting with a march that returns toward the end of the last movement to tie the piece together.
Scherzo theme on its return. A set of variations on a melancholy chromatic theme and a dashing Rondo round out this handsome serenade.

Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion

BÉLA BARTÓK
- Born March 25, 1881, in Nagyszentmiklós, Hungary.
- Died September 26, 1945, in New York City.
- Composed in 1937.
- Premiered on January 16, 1938, in Basle.
- First CMS performance on October 12, 1974, by pianists Ursula Oppens and André-Michel Schub and percussionists Richard Fitz and Gordon Gottlieb.
- Duration: 26 minutes

SOMETHING TO KNOW: Bartók wrote this unusually scored piece for Swiss impresario Paul Sacher and his International Society for Contemporary Music.

SOMETHING TO LISTEN FOR: The slow movement is in Bartók’s characteristic night music style, with quiet, atmospheric melodies broken up by rustling insect sounds.

Bartók first met the Swiss conductor Paul Sacher in the summer of 1929, when they were both in Basle for performances by the International Society for Contemporary Music. Bartók returned frequently and gladly to Basle, and developed important associations in the city. The Basle chapter of the ISCM commissioned the Music for Strings, Percussion, and Celesta from him in 1936 and the Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion the following year. In 1938, when the rise of the Nazis to power made life unendurable for him in Budapest (during the summer of 1937, he and Kodály, who had done more to unearth the treasury of Hungarian folksong than anyone else in that country’s history, were accused by Nazi sympathizers in the press of an “insufficiency of nationalism”), one of his greatest fears was that the manuscripts of some of his recent works would be destroyed in the imminent hostilities. He cataloged several of them, including his original scores for the Music for Strings, Percussion, and Celesta, Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion, Mikrokosmos, Second Rhapsody, Forty-Four Duos, Twenty Hungarian Songs for Voice and Piano, and the children’s choruses, and sent them to his friend and hostess in Basle, Mrs. Oscar Müller-Widmann, who guarded them until the end of the war. In the summer of 1939, Sacher, realizing the toll that the political upheaval in Hungary was taking on Bartók’s creativity, put at his disposal a chalet at Saanen in the massif of Gruyère, near Fribourg in Switzerland, where Bartók completed the Divertimento for Strings.

When Paul Sacher founded the Basle Chamber Orchestra in 1927, one of his purposes was to foster the performance of new music. To that end, he commissioned works from Stravinsky, Honegger, Strauss, Hindemith, and other modern masters, and presented them for the first time on his concert series. In 1937, for the tenth anniversary of the Swiss chapter of the ISCM, he asked Bartók to write a piece commemorating the event, and Bartók responded with the Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion. The work was written on a holiday in the Austrian province of Carinthia during the summer of 1937, and premiered in Basle on January 16, 1938, by the composer and his wife, Ditta Pástory, and percussionists Fritz Schiesser and Philipp Rühlig. “The whole thing sounds quite unusual,” Bartók reported to his friend Sándor Albrecht the following week, “but the Basle people liked it anyway.” The composer toured widely in Europe with his new sonata during the following year (except in the Nazi-dominated lands, where he refused to appear), performing it in London, Amsterdam, Brussels, Luxembourg, Budapest, Zurich, Paris, and Venice. He also included the work on his first concert after moving to the United States, on November 3, 1940, at New York’s Town Hall. The following month he made an orchestral version of the composition as the Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion, which he played on January 21, 1943, with Fritz Reiner and the New York Philharmonic; it was his last public appearance as a pianist.

Bartók provided the following précis of his Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion:

“The first movement opens with a slow introduction which anticipates a motive of the Allegro. The Allegro movement itself is in sonata form.

PAUL SACHER ON BÉLA BARTÓK

In 1945, shortly after Bartók died, Swiss conductor Paul Sacher wrote this vivid description of his Hungarian friend and colleague:

Whoever met Bartók, thinking of the rhythmic strength of his work, was surprised by his slight, delicate figure. He had the outward appearance of a fine-nerved scholar. Possessed of fanatical will and pitiless severity, and propelled by an ardent spirit, he affected inaccessibility and was reservedly polite. His being breathed light and brightness; his eyes burned with a noble fire. In the flash of his searching glance, no falseness or obscurity could endure. If in performance an especially hazardous and refractory passage came off well, he laughed in boyish glee; and when he was pleased with the successful solution of a problem, he actually beamed. That meant more to him than forced compliments, which I never heard from his mouth.
Tchaikovsky’s soul was seldom at rest in the years following his marital disaster in 1877, and he sought distraction in frequent travel abroad; Paris and Italy were his favorite destinations. In January 1890 he settled in Florence, and spent the next three months in that beautiful city working on his latest operatic venture, Pique Dame (The Queen of Spades). He took long walks along the Arno, marveled that spring flowers sprouted in February, and savored the food. “I have found here all I need for satisfactory work,” he wrote to his brother Modeste. After a brief stay in Rome, he arrived back in Russia on May 1, noting five days later to a friend that after finishing Pique Dame, “I want to make sketches for a sextet for strings.” The orchestration of the opera was completed by early the next month, and on June 12 he told Modeste that he was “starting the string sextet tomorrow.”

For the sextet Tchaikovsky apparently used some sketches he had made for a

SOMETHING TO KNOW: Tchaikovsky wrote his “Souvenir de Florence” after a trip to Italy in 1890.

SOMETHING TO LISTEN FOR: Though the music sounds primarily Russian throughout, the most Italianate movement is the slow movement, which features a delicate and airy duet between the first violin and first cello.
similar composition three years earlier, but almost immediately admitted to his brother running into problems with the new piece: “I started working on it the day before yesterday, and am writing under great strain, the difficulty being not necessarily a lack of ideas, but the new format. Six independent voices are needed, and, moreover, they have to be homogeneous. This is very difficult. Haydn was never able to overcome such difficulties, and never wrote any chamber music other than quartets.... I definitely do not want to write just any old tune and then arrange it for six instruments, I want a sextet—that is, six independent voices, so that it can never be anything but a sextet.” That Tchaikovsky was wrong about Haydn, who wrote at least one sextet and several quintets, did not diminish his trouble with the piece. Still, he persevered, and by the end of the month he had completed the first draft. “Up to now I am very pleased with it,” he told Modeste. He began the orchestration of the score on July 13th in anticipation of its performance the next month in St. Petersburg, but that concert never materialized and he did not hear the sextet until it was played for him by some friends in his St. Petersburg apartment in November. As with other of his works, his initial pleasure with the sextet evaporated after hearing it. “It will be necessary to change the String Sextet radically,” he reported to the composer Mikhail Ippolitov-Ivanov. “It turned out to be extremely poor in all respects.” He began a revision early in 1891, but had to put it aside for his tour to the United States in April and May, and then for the composition and production of The Nutcracker and the opera Iolanthe; the new version was not finished until January 1892 in Paris. It was at that time that Tchaikovsky, without further explanation, appended the phrase “Souvenir de Florence” to its title. Jurgenson published the score and parts in June, and the Souvenir de Florence was given its public premiere, with good success, in St. Petersburg on December 7, 1892 by an ensemble including the famous violinist Leopold Auer.

In their biography of Tchaikovsky, Lawrence and Elisabeth Hanson wrote, “The Souvenir de Florence... is very pleasant and extremely cleverly constructed. It is above all suffused with an atmosphere not often associated with this composer, of a calm geniality.” It is probably this quality that prompted Tchaikovsky, who often wrote in his letters of the “heavenly” Italian climate, to add the sobriquet to the work’s original title. The music itself is decidedly Russian in mood and melody, with only a certain lightness of spirit in the first two movements showing any possible Italianate traits. Indeed, if anything the sextet exhibits a strong German influence in the richness of its string sonorities and thematic development, which frequently recall Brahms’s chamber music. The opening movement is a full sonata structure given in the style of a bustling waltz. The following Adagio is disposed in a three-part form whose brief center section is constructed from a delightful, fluttering rhythmic figuration. The two closing movements are based on folk-like themes, the first a sad song that is the subject of considerable elaboration as it progresses, the other a bounding Cossack dance.
