

Bernie Saulnier Jr.

Developer

Bernie Saulnier Jr., president and CEO of Saulnier Development, is the fourth generation of his family to work in the construction industry. A native of Leominster, Massachusetts, Bernie discovered a fascination with building early on when he accompanied his father to construction sites as a child. After attending the Wentworth Institute for Construction Management, he worked in the construction industry for several companies as a project supervisor then later as a project manager. In 2003, he started his own construction company which eventually branched out into the development and construction of large real estate projects. He founded Saulnier Development in 2014 after almost 25 years in the industry.

Saulnier Development has built some of New England's most innovative and high-quality building projects, from condominiums in historic Boston buildings to athletic facilities in Bedford, Massachusetts and seasonal cottages in southern Maine.

"When I design or build something, I put myself in the place of the buyer or owner," notes Bernie. "Whether it's a condominium, a home, or a commercial space, it has to be the best quality."

After summering for almost two decades in Saco, Maine, Bernie and his wife, Alissa, now live there full-time.
