WELCOME

Dear Friends,

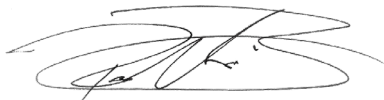

It is my pleasure to welcome you to our final Curtis Opera Theatre production of the 2023–24 school year: Leoš Janáček's The Cunning Little Vixen, here at the Perelman Theater.

The final opera production of the school year is always special, representing the culmination of the opera studio's work together over the year. But this moment is also a little bittersweet, since we will say goodbye to our graduating students at commencement next weekend. We are so very proud of them and are eager to see all they will accomplish as Curtis alumni.

Although Vixen is our final opera production of this school year, there is so much to look forward to in the year ahead. The 2024–25 school year marks Curtis's centennial—a momentous occasion celebrating the incredible achievements of our first century and all that we seek to accomplish in our next hundred years. Throughout Curtis's centennial season, our enormously talented students will be joined by a star-studded array of alumni guest artists, including Yuja Wang, Ray Chen, Time For Three, and Teddy Abrams. The Curtis Opera Theatre series is a visionary and expansive lineup, featuring the East Coast premiere of George Lewis and Monteverdi's The Comet / Poppea, Mozart's delightful Le nozze di Figaro, and Bernstein's spectacular Candide. I invite you to see all that we are planning at Curtis.edu/100 and hope you will join us often.

Of course, our performances are made possible thanks to the generous support of friends like you. We are immensely grateful for the time and resources that you invest in our students and our school. Thank you for all you do for Curtis.

All my very best,

Roberto Díaz (Viola '84)

FROM THE DIRECTOR

John Matsumoto Giampietro

It's such a privilege to be working on this masterpiece of 20th-century opera, almost exactly 100 years after its premiere in Brno. This opera explores the profound connection we have with Nature and how humans, the animal world, and our environment are all woven together into the fabric of existence. It highlights the similar journeys we all take from birth to death. This opera is both heart-building and heartbreaking. It touches on the deep experiences of life, love, and loss.

Our production takes a special approach to highlight these elements of the piece. We are exploring the themes of the opera through the ideas of Spaces, Memory, and Return. Our relationship with Spaces is a shared one. Nature isn't "outside." Our "inner" lives are not separate or removed from Nature. This is reflected in our set, our playing area: a fused, shared place where the interior co-exists with the forest.

We are exploring the idea of Return as coming back to a place of renewal and change as nature does through seasons and generations. And finally, Memory, a form of Return. Our production frames the action as a memory play. The story of the Vixen and all the opera's characters, human and animal, all connect to individual or shared memories of life, loss, and renewal. ♦

Q&A WITH THE CONDUCTOR

Vinay Parameswaran ('13)

What do you believe are the most striking aspects of Janáček's score, and are there any particular moments throughout that really resonate with you?

For Janáček, I think it's very personal. He was 70 when he wrote it. He had a love interest who was much younger than him, and it was not reciprocated. There are elements of his life that come through in this particular opera—the way that the gamekeeper talks about the vixen like a jilted lover; it's like he's in love with her. There's one character, the schoolmaster, who has a big aria in act two, and he's addressing a woman we never see in the opera named Terynka, but I feel like Janáček is that schoolmaster.

I remember when I listened to this for the first time in 2010 and 2011; I don't think I knew any other Janáček pieces. I don't know if I had heard his Sinfonietta or Glagolitic Mass back then, like I know them now. I was really taken by how different it was from anything else I'd listened to. Janáček's score has an incredibly unique language for the orchestra in terms of Czech composers, and what I love about Czech music is that there's always this kind of underlying sadness or melancholy. Even when music is “happy,” there's something underneath that's pulling at your heart, and you certainly get that in his unique language in this piece. It was really my first foray into this composer's world, and what a great introduction to his music. It is one of the masterpieces of the early 20th century.

For someone who hasn't seen this opera before, what do you hope they will glean from the experience?

Vixen often gets misconstrued as only being about animals in the forest. It's about humanity. It's how we interact with each other and with nature. What I love about the way John [Matsumoto Giampietro] is approaching it is this whole idea of return and remembering, a beautiful circle of life, and how nature recreates itself every year. For all the human characters, it's how they reflect on things in the past and how that shapes them.

It's a piece that has so many relatable aspects to our lives because it's about our relationship with nature and our relationship with other people in this world. Every year, especially where I live in Wisconsin now, we really get the four seasons, and every spring, there's kind of this rebirth of the world, and the opera's about that whole cycle and how nature returns. That's what makes it such a relatable piece—the way [Janáček] does it through the point of view of these animals, but also these humans, who are very miserable. Towards the end of act three, the gamekeeper shows some empathy and care for his drinking buddy. That's a poignant moment in the score through this whole journey as they get older and remember when they were young.

Half of act one is just the orchestra alone. There's very little singing, but it's some of the most beautiful music that Janáček wrote, and I think his score is very accessible. He really saves some of the best parts for when the orchestra's playing by itself, but I think that each of the characters is so unique, so special. This piece comes from essentially a comic strip. There are moments of real comedy in this piece, and it's juxtaposed with the most heartbreaking story at the same time.

Can you share any fond memories of your studies here at Curtis?

I didn't go to music school for my undergrad. I went to Brown and it was definitely a culture shock coming here from a liberal arts university to a tiny school with 160 students. To be honest, I thought I wasn't going to fit in and make friends because it was so different, but I made some of my best friends in the world here. And obviously, working with [Otto-Werner] Mueller. I really miss him. He was such an incredible teacher. What I've always appreciated the most about him was his humility in terms of respect for the composer. I thought his approach was just very human. I always respected that.

Some of my favorite moments were getting together with friends when we had a free hour and reading sonatas or reading lieder for fun because we loved the music. I also met my wife, Sara Huebner (Trumpet '13), who's now a veterinarian, at Curtis. I never thought I would marry someone I studied with. It was a really special four years, and when I left Curtis, I got my first job. So, I'm grateful for the experiences and great training in terms of podium time. I felt like what I learned here really served me well in my first ten years out of the profession.

Recently, when I was at CCM [conducting The Cunning Little Vixen], Ayane Kozasa (Viola '12, String Quartet '16), who's one of my best friends and was my classmate, she's now at CCM [Ms. Kozasa was appointed to the CCM faculty in 2022] and joined Kronos [Quartet]. I just saw her in San Francisco. Every time I see folks at an orchestra somewhere or we're just passing through a city doing our different things, it's so special to reconnect with them. All of these people are doing amazing things in the field. ♦
