ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

The digital age has fundamentally transformed the landscape of human rights and constitutional freedoms, creating a complex ecosystem where traditional legal frameworks often struggle to keep pace. While the internet, artificial intelligence, and global connectivity offer unprecedented opportunities for free expression, democratic mobilization, and access to information, they simultaneously introduce severe threats. Issues such as state and corporate surveillance, algorithmic bias, data privacy breaches, and digital censorship challenge the very core of constitutional protections. Furthermore, the rise of powerful tech monopolies has shifted public discourse into privately owned spaces, blurring the line between public and private regulation. This conference seeks to interrogate these dualities, exploring how constitutional principles can be dynamically reinterpreted, updated, or newly engineered to safeguard human dignity, autonomy, and equity in an increasingly automated world.

AIM OF THE CONFERENCE

The primary aim of this conference is to bridge the gap between rapidly evolving technological advancements, state fiscal frameworks, and the constitutional structures designed to protect fundamental human liberties. By convening a diverse cohort of legal scholars, economists, technologists, and public health advocates, the event intends to foster a rigorous, interdisciplinary dialogue. It seeks to critically evaluate how modern digital governance and state revenue strategies—specifically indirect taxation on life-saving medicines—impact individual autonomy and socio-economic welfare rights. Ultimately, the conference aims to move beyond merely diagnosing systemic threats, focusing instead on proposing actionable, forward-looking legal frameworks. Through this collaborative exchange, we intend to map out a resilient blueprint for digital constitutionalism and equitable fiscal policies that inherently prioritize human dignity and the fundamental right to health.

OBJECTIVE OF THE CONFERENCE

The primary objective of this conference is to systematically dissect emerging challenges to constitutional freedoms by analyzing algorithmic discrimination, digital surveillance, and automated state censorship alongside the socio-economic impacts of modern fiscal policies. It seeks to critically evaluate how indirect tax frameworks, such as GST on essential life-saving medicines, create systemic barriers to healthcare affordability and accessibility, thereby threatening the constitutional guarantee of the right to life. By bridging disciplinary silos among legal scholars, economists, and technologists, the event aims to reconceptualize traditional legal doctrines to fit the nuances of both digital mediums and public welfare mandates. Ultimately, the conference intends to investigate how digital tools can enhance civic transparency while simultaneously generating actionable policy recommendations that balance a state's tax sovereignty with its affirmative obligation to safeguard human rights, culminating in the publication of cutting-edge, peer-reviewed research.
