CLIA RELEASES QUARTERLY TRAVEL AGENT CRUISE INDUSTRY OUTLOOK REPORT

CLIA recently released the Travel Agent Cruise Industry Outlook Report, revealing that North American travel agents expect to see notable growth in the number of cruises people take in 2016 as well as an increase in passenger spending.

The report, which was conducted at the end of 2015, is the first in what will be a quarterly research study from CLIA, designed to forecast trends in the cruise industry among the travel agent community.

At the end of 2015, CLIA released its 2016 State of the Cruise Industry which projected another strong year with 24 million passengers expected to take a cruise in 2016, up from 23 million in 2015. Travel Agents agree with this outlook, as 83 percent expect their sales volume to increase in the coming year. The report also indicated that the cruise industry is experiencing the greatest booking increase in both ocean and river cruising when compared to other travel.

Travel agents who would like to participate in the quarterly surveys are encouraged to email CLIAresearchpanel@cruising.org.

About the Travel Agent Cruise Industry Outlook

The CLIA Travel Agent Cruise Industry Outlook report is a quarterly study conducted by CLIA. The data and research are compiled based on online survey responses from the CLIA Travel Agent Research Panel, which consists of 700 travel agents.
Please describe your position and role in the cruise industry.

Since Seatrade’s acquisition by UBM, I have been the General Manager leading the strategic brand direction for the cruise industry’s leading business-to-business events, as well as our online news and publications. Seatrade’s cruise events bring together buyers and suppliers for high level conference discussions, workshops and exhibitions, with the flagship show (Seatrade Cruise Global) drawing more than 11,000 registered attendees and over 800 exhibiting companies from 93 countries. This is an exciting year for Seatrade Cruise Global as we change locations. Due to the renovations at the Miami Convention Center, we have moved north to Fort Lauderdale for the next few years - change is always challenging, but we are fortunate to have an incredible team of sales, marketing, event and operations experts at UBM to guide the transition. Our worldwide Seatrade CSruise events also include Seatrade Cruise Med, Seatrade Cruise Asia and our smaller niche events, such as the Seatrade Middle East Cruise Forum.

Name a “highlight” in your career.

I enjoy working with the great people I am surrounded with to bring improvement and change within our industry and that has truly been the case since joining Seatrade. It has been fantastic working with the team at Seatrade to ‘integrate’ the event within the wider UBM group while innovating our business to deliver the best possible events and media for the industries we serve (we also work in the General Maritime industry).

What do you believe is the most significant advancement in the cruise industry – specifically in your area of expertise?

With the world constantly looking for new resources in terms of fuel, and innovations in ‘green technology’, I feel that the cruise industry is one which leads the way in terms of pioneering technology and new ideas on how to work with our environment, whether that be LNG or any other technical development. Additionally, the very recent focus and development of the cruise industry in China has been quite significant.

What is the biggest challenge in the cruise industry as it relates to your sector, and how would you address it?

As we go back into Asian markets to support the development and growth in those regions, there will always be new and demanding challenges such as language, diversity, culture and politics. We are overcoming these in Asia by partnering with the most influential and important trade and governmental organizations in the regions we will enter – more news on this will be announced at Seatrade Cruise Global.

Enhanced Survivability of Passenger Ships
The International Maritime Organization (IMO) has developed a set of amendments to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS) that will further enhance the survivability of passenger ships built after 2020 in the unlikely event of a grounding or collision. While cruise ships today are already being designed and built, at or above these enhanced levels of survivability, the regulations are being updated based on the results of a recent European study of passenger ships. The cruise industry directly assisted with the study and supported the additional survivability requirements for passenger ships.

Damage Control Drills
Based on a proposal from CLIA and technical input from the Cruise Ship Safety Forum, the International Maritime Organization (IMO) developed amendments to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS) that will require the crew on new and existing passenger ships to carry out damage control drills at least once every six weeks beginning in 2020. This is in addition to the already required drills for fire and abandon ship as well as the passenger muster drill. These simulated emergencies are carried out on board to help the ship’s crew maintain proficiency and further enhance the safety of the ship and all passengers and crew.

IMO Maritime Ambassador Appointment
CLIA would like to congratulate Vanessa DiDomenico on her appointment as Maritime Ambassador under the IMO’s Maritime Ambassador Scheme. Vanessa, a project manager for the Corporate Ship Refit division of Carnival Corporation & plc, was nominated to serve as an advocate for the maritime and seafaring professions. CLIA looks forward to seeing her inspire a new generation of maritime professionals and seafarers by sharing her passion for the industry.
CLIA Honored with Maritime Award of the Americas

This month, the Secretariat of the Inter-American Committee on Ports (CIP) of the Organization of American States (OAS) announced CLIA as the winner of the 2015 Maritime Award of the Americas, in the Environmental Waste Management, Cruise Lines category. The award process was highly competitive and the winning practices “showed measurable outcome and significant sustained impact.”

For years, CLIA and its Cruise Line Member ships have had policies and procedures in place to reduce the industry’s environmental footprint. The cruise industry has a great responsibility as environmental stewards, and CLIA is grateful to OAS for its public recognition of the cruise industry’s collective excellence, innovation and leadership.

Some CLIA Cruise Line Members’ ships are already repurposing 100% of the waste generated on board by reducing, reusing, donating, recycling and converting waste into energy. Careful waste management and recycling practices ensure that unrecyclable waste on cruise ships can be as little as 1.5 pounds per person a day compared to the average of 4–5 pounds per person on land in the U.S. In an average year, the cruise industry recycles 80,000 tons of paper, plastic, glass and aluminum cans.

The award will be presented to CLIA during the OAS Hemispheric Seminar on Corporate Social Responsibility and Gender Equality in the Port Sector, on April 29th, 2016, in Panama City, Panama.
