Today's interdependent global economy and geopolitical landscape connect our actions and interests more than ever to the actions and interests of others. This course, "Introduction to Global Affairs," is designed to provide students with the knowledge, skills, and perspective required to understand and engage effectively with their interconnected world. Drawing on the Council on Foreign Relations' vast catalog of expert-informed, accurate, and accessible resources, the course introduces students to the main decision-makers and policy considerations that shape the world today, ending with a broad survey of the major issues facing the twenty-first-century world.

Course Learning Outcomes:

After successfully completing this course, students will be able to:

- Identify key actors, policies, and issues in global affairs and explain their relevance.
- Identify and communicate some of the diverse perspectives that populate today's world.
- Recognize and predict the local and global effects of their own, individual actions.
- Recognize and explain the global contexts that inform their own, individual actions.
- Explain and assess the historical, cultural, geographical, and political contexts behind global events and issues.
- Collaborate with peers to develop practical responses to contemporary global issues.

General Education Learning Outcomes

After successfully completing this course, students will be able to:

- Engage meaningfully and responsibly with global affairs.
- Communicate effectively and appropriately across diverse cultural contexts.
- Draw on perspectives beyond their own when discussing global challenges.
- Connect personal decision-making to local, global, and international contexts.

Readings

This course relies heavily on readings from CFR Education, the education arm of the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR). Founded in 1921, CFR is a nonpartisan, independent national membership organization, think tank, educator, and publisher. Its core mission is to inform U.S. engagement with the world. With over 700 free, nonpartisan, multimedia teaching and learning resources, CFR Education's vast, student-focused library offers supplemental materials to help high school and higher education students gain the knowledge, skills, and perspective needed to navigate today's interconnected world.

This syllabus divides readings into three categories:

- CFR Education Resources - readings, timelines, and videos designed for students to gain a foundational understanding of global affairs.
- CFR Supplementary Resources - CFR backgrounders, In Briefs, timelines, podcasts, videos, articles, and reports designed for a deeper dive into policy analysis.
- CFR Education Classroom Activities - teaching materials, including simulations, designed to engage students in the college classroom through active learning.

Class Policies and Procedures

Conduct

The higher education classroom is a space to engage with challenging ideas and material. This may not always be comfortable; however, conversations informed by diverse viewpoints contribute to valuable critical thinking and higher-level learning skills. Even if you do not agree with every outlook expressed, listening to different points of view may give you greater insight into your own perspective. Please remember that any claims made during class discussions must be based on verifiable evidence.

As a learning community, we will use the semester to practice civil discourse, or "robust, honest, frank and constructive dialogue and deliberation that seeks to advance the public interest." If you feel uncomfortable with how content in the course is presented or discussed, please contact me for further conversation or, if you feel comfortable doing so, you may say so in class in a manner that aligns with class behavioral expectations.

Assessment

This course assesses your knowledge of and engagement with course material. Students may exhibit higher-order engagement by: asking thought-provoking questions, displaying persuasive written and oral communication, using evidence to construct reasoned and logical arguments, improving over the course of the semester, and providing respectful and informed contributions to class discussions.
