

Anita Orbán: Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs of Hungary

As Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs, she is advancing a foreign policy built on professionalism, transparency, and consistency, while strengthening Hungary's role in a more competitive, secure, and resilient Europe. She is committed to reinforcing Central European cooperation and positioning Hungary as a trusted partner for investment, innovation, and sustainable economic growth.

Her career spans diplomacy, international business, and civil society, giving her a distinctive perspective on how geopolitics, economic security, and global markets increasingly shape one another. Having served both as a diplomat and an international business executive, she understands how political decisions influence markets - and how business can strengthen resilience, competitiveness, and long-term prosperity.

Between 2015 and 2020, she worked in the U.S. liquefied natural gas (LNG) industry, first at Cheniere and later at Tellurian, leading business development across Central Europe, Southeast Asia, and North Africa. She subsequently served as Deputy CEO of Vodafone Hungary before joining Vodafone Group in London as a Director for Public Affairs and ESG.

Today, she advocates for a Europe that remains competitive, innovative, and strategically resilient in an increasingly contested global environment. Drawing on leadership experience across diplomacy, energy, and international business, she brings a practical perspective on the strategic challenges shaping Hungary's and Europe's future - from competitiveness and economic security to technology, investment, and geopolitical resilience.
