Preparing for an Event

Outstanding athletes usually follow a process when they are preparing for special competitive events. For weeks in advance, sometimes, for years before an event such as the Olympics, they formulate a winning strategy and follow every step in their quest to be victorious. Joella Kenjel Lloyd, one of Antigua and Barbuda’s most outstanding young athletes, has her own special routine which she follows every time she is invited to participate in a competition.

Joella begins her preparation by attending to her diet. One week before the event, she consumes a lot of foods that are rich in carbohydrates. She takes special care to include complex carbohydrates such as sweet potato and cassava in her meals. These energy giving provisions give her the stamina she needs to complete her race successfully. Prior to the week before a competition, Miss Lloyd trains very hard almost every day of the week but in that final week, her training is minimised. This is the next important step in her preparation. She continues to exercise and practise but not with the same intensity as she usually does. Reducing the level of training at this stage helps to lessen the likelihood of an injury occurring and it keeps her muscles active but not worn out.

Getting adequate rest is also a key part of the winning formula used by this Jennings resident. Although, at sixteen, she is a typical teenager who could find multiple reasons to stay up late, she knows the importance of being well rested and alert for a race. The night before a competition, she goes to bed extremely early because it is important that she gets more than seven hours of sleep. When she gets up in the morning, she does a full body stretch and she takes her vitamins.

The final aspect of her preparation which is her warm-up routine takes place just before her race is called. This routine begins with a few laps around the designated field followed by stretching for about fifteen minutes. After the stretches, Miss Lloyd does a specific set of speed drills before taking about five minutes off to hydrate herself. Once her break is over, she puts on her running shoes and does a few practice runs. By this time, she is mentally and physically ready for her race so she just stays still and waits for it to be called.
