St. Claire Regional a charter member of the Kentucky Health Collaborative

Regional and community health systems across the Commonwealth partner to reverse KY’s poor health statistics, share best practices and prepare for a population health model of care delivery.

On Jan. 28, St. Claire Regional and nine additional healthcare systems across the Commonwealth of Kentucky, collectively known as the Kentucky Health Collaborative, announced primary objectives of raising the standards of care across the state, addressing the Commonwealth’s poor health statistics and reducing the cost of care through greater operational efficiencies.

The founding health systems’ chief executive officers or appointed executives are serving on a steering committee guiding the formation and development of the collaborative.

Kentucky Health Collaborative is still in its early stages of development, and there are many details yet to be finalized, such as which issues and opportunities for improvement the group will tackle first. As the collaborative develops the systems and infrastructure needed to accomplish its goals, the opportunity to join will extend to a wider pool of potential members across the Commonwealth.

“For St. Claire Regional, being part of this collaborative means access to even more best practices and resources that will enable us to continue improving the great work we are doing to provide quality healthcare services close to home,” says Mark J. Neff, SCR President/CEO. “We also will have a new platform to share our successes with others and help advance care across our Commonwealth.”
