I would also like to add that the examination essays are evaluated by specific people. In order for an expert who checks from 50 to 80 works per day to mark an essay as noteworthy, this essay should not only meet all the requirements below, but also have a certain originality, originality and originality - this is implied by the essay genre itself. Therefore, it is necessary not only to present scientific and factual material on the topic, but also to pleasantly surprise with the non-standard and flexible way of thinking.

First of all, during the exam, you need to correctly allocate time. Practice shows that writing an essay requires at least 1-1.5 hours out of 3.5 hours allocated to the exam in social studies. It is most advisable to start writing an essay after all the other tasks of KIM have been solved, because This type of work requires maximum concentration of graduate efforts.

Carefully read all suggested topics.

Choose topics that are understandable, i.e. - the student must clearly understand what the statement is about, what the author wanted to say with this phrase. In order to remove doubts about whether he understands the topic correctly, the graduate must reformulate the phrase in his own words, defining the main idea. The student can do this orally or in draft.

From the selected understandable utterances, it is necessary to choose one topic - one that the student knows best. It should be noted that often the examinees choose topics that are easy, in their opinion, but which turn out to be difficult when revealing the topic due to the limited scientific and factual material on this issue (in other words, the phrase itself says everything, nothing can be added). In such cases, the essay is reduced to a simple statement of the meaning of the statement in different ways and is evaluated by experts because of the poor evidence base is low. Therefore, it is necessary to choose the topic of the essay so that the student, when writing it, can fully show the completeness of his knowledge and the depth of his thoughts (that is, the topic should be winning).

When choosing a topic for an essay, it is necessary to pay attention to what social science this statement refers to. Practice shows that a number of phrases can refer to several sciences at once. For example, the statement of I. Goethe "Man is determined not only by natural qualities, but also acquired" may belong to philosophy, social psychology, and sociology. Accordingly, the content of the essay should vary depending on this, i.e. must comply with the specified basic science.

Essays do not need to be completely written in draft. Firstly, because of the limited time, and secondly, due to the fact that at the time of writing the essay some thoughts come, and at the time of rewriting, others, and it is much more difficult to redo the finished text than to create a new one. In the draft, the graduate makes only a plan of his essay, rough short sketches of the meaning of the phrase, his argumentation, the points of view of scientists, concepts and theoretical positions that he intends to give in his work, as well as an approximate order of their arrangement one after another, taking into account the semantic logic of the essay.

Without fail, the student must express his personal attitude to the chosen topic in a clearly defined wording ("I agree", "I disagree", "I do not completely agree", "I agree, but partially" or are similar in meaning and meaning of the phrase) . The presence of a personal relationship is one of the criteria on the basis of which experts evaluate essays.

Without fail, the graduate must state his understanding of the meaning of the statement. Those. a high school student explains in his own words - what the author wanted to say with this phrase. It is more advisable to do this at the very beginning of the essay. And if you combine the requirements of this paragraph with the provisions of the previous one, then, for example, the beginning of an essay on the philosophy "Before speaking about the good of satisfying needs, it is necessary to determine what needs are good" looks like: "I completely agree with the statement of the great Russian writer half of XIX - beg. XX centuries L.N. Tolstoy, in which he speaks of genuine and imaginary needs. "

It is very necessary to approach the selection of arguments to confirm your point of view. Arguments must be convincing, reasonable. As arguments, data from the corresponding sciences, historical facts, facts from public life are used. Arguments of a personal nature (examples from personal life) are rated the lowest, so their use as evidence is undesirable. It should be remembered that it's easy to "turn" any personal example into an example from public life, from social practice, if you write about it from a third party (for example, not "I was a naughty saleswoman in the store, thereby violating my consumer rights", but "Let's say that the seller was naughty to citizen S. Thus, she violated his rights as a consumer.
