teen ambassador program application

Forty high school students who are passionate about the performing arts will establish a vital link to their peers and the community regarding the arts—both locally and nationally.

overview

Dr. Phillips Center Teen Ambassadors play a major part in our arts education programming.

They lead the way through their involvement in events like performances, professional workshops and community experiences—developing leadership, writing and communication skills along the way. They learn about non-performance entertainment industry careers, non-profit business activities, and work to develop, implement and engage in ideas with industry leading professionals. Plus, they act as social media ambassadors for the Dr. Phillips Center brand, sharing their experiences and connecting with our large audience.

- Opportunities to attend various genres of shows and write reviews for immediate posting, tweeting and status updating.
- Access to guest speakers, master classes, backstage tours, and meet and greets with professionals in various career tracks connected to the arts.
- An insider's look at different non-performance arts careers—including monthly meetings that feature diverse arts industry professionals.
- Opportunities to represent the arts center at a variety of events and earn at least 10 community service hours each school year.
- Exposure to a large nonprofit business model and behind-the-scenes operations at an arts organization.
