LYNN NOTTAGE’S “CLYDE’S”
A CO-PRODUCTION WITH GOODMAN THEATRE
AT CENTER THEATRE GROUP / MARK TAPER FORUM
NOVEMBER 16 – DECEMBER 18 (OPENS NOVEMBER 19)

Directed by Kate Whoriskey
Casting Announced
Kevin Kenerly, Tamberla Perry, Reza Salazar, Nedra Snipes and Garrett Young

Celebrated creative collaborators over two decades, two-time Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright Lynn Nottage and director Kate Whoriskey bring their latest Broadway triumph, “Clyde’s,” a co-production with Goodman Theatre in Chicago to the Mark Taper Forum November 15 to December 18. It recently concluded the Goodman engagement.

The cast includes Kevin Kenerly, Tamberla Perry, Reza Salazar, Nedra Snipes and Garrett Young. Perry plays the hot-tempered Clyde, whose eponymous truck stop café’s kitchen staff of formerly incarcerated people—Kenerly as Montrellous, Salazar as Rafael, Snipes as Letitia and Young as Jason—all dream of creating the perfect sandwich.

“‘Clyde’s’ was a highlight of last year’s Broadway season, and our partnership with the Goodman Theatre allows us to bring this outstanding production to Los Angeles,” said Center Theatre Group Managing Director / CEO Meghan Pressman. “Clyde's will be the second time we have produced Lynn’s work in Los Angeles, and we are thrilled to bring this bold, engaging, and entertaining play to our audiences for its West Coast premiere.”

Center Theatre Group Associate Artistic Director Lindsay Allbaugh said, “We are beyond excited to welcome Lynn Nottage, one of the premiere playwrights of our time, back to Center Theatre Group with the West Coast premiere of ‘Clyde’s.’ From the moment we read the first draft, we knew we wanted to bring this production to Los Angeles. The characters and the story spoke to us – a tale of redemption, second chances, finding passion through the art of food, and, yes, sandwiches. Lynn reminds us once again why she is the most produced playwright in the country. We truly can’t wait to share ‘Clyde’s’ with our community.”

American Theatre announced that Nottage is the most produced playwright of the 2022-2023 season with 24 productions — her third time at the top of the list. Editor Rob Weinert-Kendt said, “‘Clyde’s’ just hit the sweet spot — [while] it addresses issues of incarceration and racial tension, it’s a comedy, it’s really smart, and it’s by a Pulitzer winner. It’s a comedy, but it’s not turning away from the world.”

Director Kate Whoriskey, whose previous world premiere collaborations with Nottage include “Sweat,” “Ruined,” “Fabulation or The Re-Education of Undine,” and “Intimate Apparel,” said to NPR, “I think Lynn has the ability to see into the future more than anyone I know, in terms of what the world is asking for.”

Understudies for this production include Debra Walton (Clyde), Preston Butler (Montrellous), Bukola Ogunmola (Letitia), Roland Ruiz (Rafael) and Connor Sullivan (Jason). The creative team includes Takeshi Kata (Set Design); Jennifer Moeller (Costume Design); Christopher Akerlind (Lighting Design); Justin Ellington (Sound Design); Cookie Jordan (Hair and Wig Design); and Justin Hicks (Composition). Casting is by Lauren Port, CSA and Rachael Jimenez, CSA, and Michelle Blair is the Production Stage Manager.

Tickets for “Clyde’s” are currently on sale and start at $35. They are available through CenterTheatreGroup.org, Audience Services at (213) 628-2772 or in person at the Center Theatre Group Box Offices (at the Ahmanson Theatre) at The Music Center, 135 N. Grand Avenue in Downtown L.A. 90012. Performances run Tuesday through Friday at 8 p.m., Saturday at 2:30 p.m. and 8 p.m., and Sunday at 1 p.m. and 6:30 p.m.

All things “Clyde’s”

- Lynn Nottage talks about “Clyde’s”
- More About Perfect Sandwiches
- Critics in Los Angeles, New York and Chicago Rave

Playwright Lynn Nottage said to NPR, “A sandwich is very simple, but you can assemble it in such a way that make those flavor combinations quite complicated. And I like to think of that as a metaphor for what we do as artists.
Chala June said in Bon Appetit, “Does the perfect sandwich exist? While there will never be a universally accepted answer, the valiant quest for sandwich perfection is what drives the playwright. ‘Clyde’s’ is a genuinely funny and deeply emotional exploration of radical imagination, restorative justice, and the healing power of food.”

“I was thinking about the tension of opposites in food, like savory and sweet,” Nottage said to Bon Appetit. ‘Things that are dissonant and harmonious, and how they shouldn’t work, but somehow when combined, they do.’ By juxtaposing slice-of-life workplace comedy with precise social commentary, Nottage showcases her ability to mine the painful nuances of everyday life for much needed nuggets of humor. ‘After what we’ve been through this last year, people want to laugh, people want to be reminded that, at the end of the tunnel, there is hope and joy,’” Nottage continued, “I thought it might be interesting to look at the ways in which [people are] physically and spiritually being exploited and whether there is room for their spirits to be resurrected,” June writes, “As the cooks try to keep their heads down, they’re continually pushed to the limit by Clyde’s constant degradation and jokes at their expense. Even when the staff find small moments of pride in their work, Clyde takes it upon herself to knock everyone down a peg. Clyde could or could not be the devil, and Montrellous could or could not be an angel. The whole play is about good and evil.”

Chicago audiences were next to experience “Clyde’s” following its Broadway run, where it earned five Tony Award nominations and was critically hailed. Jesse Green said in The New York Times, “Nottage’s delightful new play dares to flip the paradigm. Though it’s still about dark things, including prison, drugs, homelessness and poverty, it somehow turns them into bright comedy.” Charles McNulty said in the Los Angeles Times that Clyde’s is “… satisfying. Nottage has set up an entertaining battle between a diabolical capitalist who asks her staff to fry up putrid Chilean sea bass and an evangelist who preaches a gospel of dignified labor. Souls are at stake in a play that offers a modern spin on the battle between good and evil.”

Chris Jones, theatre critic of the New York Daily News and the Chicago Tribune said, Nottage “has the burners firing on all cylinders. This a very clever, multi-layered and deliciously self-aware allegory that deftly shrouds its true intent between two pieces of bread.” Sheri Flanders in the Chicago Sun-Times said, “Nottage’s scrumptious descriptions of mouth-watering sandwiches will make your taste buds salivate and your stomach grumble in anticipation.

Naveen Kuman said in Variety, “A sandwich has always been a kind of vehicle, ingredients riding between sliced bread. Nottage improbably turns the lunchtime staple into the storytelling engine of ‘Clyde’s,’ her deceptively simple flavor-bomb of a new comedy about survival, second chances and digesting whatever life serves up … Dreaming up, if not the perfect combination, then one that’s uniquely their own, becomes a metaphor for characters striving to move forward. After all, everyone needs to eat.”

Helen Shaw said in Vulture, “As the play lifts off into its final minutes, it enters a realm where conventional dramaturgy doesn’t apply. These characters aren’t heading for dramatic resolution. They’re aiming for a place, reached via sensual delight, of reconnection and reawakening.”
