Community Leaders Seek Solutions to Recreation Park Concerns

DAYTON, Ohio — Community leaders and local partners are working to address concerns about alcohol consumption and littering at a public recreation park where some members of the immigrant community have been gathering.

During a recent meeting, participants discussed the underlying challenges and explored solutions that go beyond enforcement. Proposed efforts include connecting community members with English-language classes, employment and farming opportunities, and immigration legal education through trusted community organizations and local churches.

Ebenezer Healthcare Access and faith leaders, including representatives connected to a local church, were identified as key partners in reaching residents in Kinyarwanda and Swahili. The group plans to continue the conversation during Welcome Dayton Mediation Day on October 3, where community members can receive information in languages they understand. A short educational video is also being planned for social media.

Following the meeting, participants visited the park and observed alcohol consumption and littering firsthand. The visit underscored the need for continued dialogue and collaboration to promote responsible use of public spaces while connecting community members with resources and opportunities.

The effort reflects a broader approach: building understanding, strengthening community connections, and working together to find lasting solutions.

EHA Highlights Community-Based Cancer Prevention at Health Equity Summit

CINCINNATI, Ohio — August 29, 2026
Ebenezer Healthcare Access (EHA) joined healthcare professionals, cancer survivors, advocates, and health equity leaders Saturday at the 1st Annual Health Equity Summit, hosted by the Cancer Support Community Greater Cincinnati-Northern Kentucky.

As a Justice Champion Sponsor, EHA participated in discussions and networking focused on addressing disparities in cancer prevention, screening, and access to care.

Southwest Ohio.

Through multilingual Community Health Workers serving communities across 16 languages, EHA aims to help New Americans

During the summit, EHA shared lessons from its McKesson Foundation-sponsored Columbus pilot program, which developed lower-literacy breast and cervical cancer education materials in four languages, along with accessible educational videos. The initiative brought cancer prevention and screening information directly to underserved immigrant and refugee communities. Building on the Columbus experience, EHA is exploring opportunities to expand its community-based approach across and other underserved populations overcome language, cultural, and health-literacy barriers to accessing preventive cancer care. The summit also provided an opportunity for EHA to strengthen partnerships with organizations working to advance health equity throughout the region. EHA thanks the Cancer Support Community Greater Cincinnati-Northern Kentucky for bringing together leaders committed to creating a more equitable future in cancer care.
