FIG's mission to create a market in contemporary fashion illustration proceeds with some pace. The exhibition lines up young London based artists alongside established artists from both London and New York. Included in the show are a small group of works by Beaton, Warhol and Lopez that serve as a reminder of the genre's history and the shoulders on which contemporary work is made.

The exhibition seeks to make connections between the many cross over points between the artists and their works that when mapped out create an extraordinary picture of creative enterprise that links the forces of art with the forces of fashion.

A catalogue published to accompany the exhibition with essays by Laird Borrelli and Peter York is available.

This collaboration between FIG and Christie's has been made possible through a partnership with ISSA London and the support of Blakes Hotel and In +Addition.
