For most, the AIA Dallas Tour of Homes is where the nosy and the appreciative can explore some of the best Dallas residential architecture, as chosen by the architects. But for those architects whose projects are chosen, the weekend is a culmination of years of work.

The six homes on this year's tour span the gamut, both in terms of location and style. There are a couple of Preston Hollow homes, a Junius Heights bungalow, an East Dallas charmer, and a Far North Dallas property. There's something style-wise for everyone, from modern to transitional to historic renovations. If you like the sort of modern homes common on AIA tours, stop into Marc McCollom Architect's Bent Trail house. If you're interested in universal design and green practices, try AMDG Studio's Bobbitt Drive ranch. If you want a travel-inspired mid-century modern, wander through Maestri Studio's Patrick Drive project.
