Looking to make a good first impression when it comes to your home? Even if your interior design is fresh, clean and modern, if your front door and yard are looking rundown and uninviting, then it's time to focus on the curb appeal of your home sweet home. The good news, adding curb appeal can come in many forms. From major renovations that change the entire appearance of the outside of your house to small changes that pack a big punch, if you're ready to tackle some home improvements that will make the entrance to your home shine, keep reading.

9. Take on Big Repairs

Whether it's a home that is new to you and you've inherited the repairs, or you've just been putting off fixing minor and major issues, when you're looking to add curb appeal, you'll need to prioritize and get to work. In the restoration of this 1920s home there was a lot to tackle, and once the long overdue clearing and maintenance was taken care of, this house is a spectacular example of curb appeal.
