

THIS HOUSE IS THE PERFECT BALANCE BETWEEN TRADITION AND MODERNITY

The architecture studio Maestri Studio has designed a home for a large family getting spaces with a certain independence and a modern and original aesthetic.

We visited a house designed by the architecture studio Maestri Studio in a neighborhood of Texas, United States. The owners, a family of three generations, were looking for a home where they could all live together with independence and privacy. They wanted a house with a modern and avant-garde interior, but that its exterior was integrated with the traditional architecture of the area, a house that combined the new and the modern with elegance and balance.

The new distribution has allowed to create a space with an en suite bedroom with a large bathroom and a living room to maintain privacy, but connected to the rest of the house. Among the things that the clients wanted to incorporate into the house are the large windows to allow greater entry of natural light, which the design team used to highlight their collection of antique relics and create special places for them. On the other hand, they decided to maintain some original elements of the house such as the floors or architectural details of the walls of the house.

For the different spaces they chose subtle shades in white and brass details with brightly colored flashes throughout the home to stand out and create unique focal points. An example of this is the modern kitchen with strong black and white contrasts with touches of brass. In the living room, the incredible black and white vintage sofa stands out, while in the bathroom it is a large floral print wallpaper. Between the kitchen and the living room, a floating piece stands out that creates a unique division, keeping the spaces open. A bright and ventilated atmosphere is held throughout the house.
