In this ranking, TheBestSchools.org examined those colleges and universities with online courses that lead to a bachelor's degree in human resources. These courses cover study subjects such as business law and ethics, management principles, workforce planning and development, compensation and benefits, occupational training, conflict resolution, labor law and more, and often include practical or field-experience coursework, such as an internship or capstone project, to give students real-world knowledge and help develop professional connections.

Our ranking criteria for this degree program are based on (1) the quality of the program, (2) the types of courses offered, (3) the faculty, (4) rankings, (5) awards, and (6) reputation, including the school's reputation for effectively providing online degree programs.

“Skilled human resources specialists are in constant demand in the corporate world,” says Dan Edelen, director of marketing services for TheBestSchools.org. “A company lives and dies by the quality and dedication of the people who make it great, which makes human resources a critical success facilitator.
