“Seeing young people this intelligent, innovative, and daring gives us all hope for a bright and promising future,” says Dan Edelen, marketing director for TheBestSchools.org. “Acknowledging the next generation of leaders in government, literature, the arts, science, and engineering, and encouraging their successes, helps us know we are in good hands. It’s why we wanted to give these future leaders the credit they deserve for all their hard work and amazing accomplishments. Simply knowing who they are is the first, best step.”

The creator of a space junk tracking model that beat NASA’s, the developer of an exoskeletal robotic glove for the disabled, an actor on Modern Family with a 150 IQ, and the youngest CEO of a venture capital-funded Silicon Valley startup—these are just some of the 100 talented youth profiled in the two articles. Readers will not only be inspired by the new profiles in the 2018 list but will see how 2013’s smartest have continued their success.
