Supporting Active Work

The desire for open, social areas in corporate settings is increasing, and for good reason. These spaces provide a private get-away from the main workspace and also help promote collaboration.

Giving workers a warm, comfortable place for private work or to converse and share ideas with each other conveniently enables knowledge work.

Multi-Purpose, Multi-Use

With today's workers working away from their desk a majority of the day, workspaces are integrating areas designed to accommodate either individuals or groups in a variety of uses. This includes spaces designed for concentrated work or group brainstorming strategically placed throughout the floorplan.

Designed for Work

Creating a space where workers can get away from it all provides an opportunity to get work done outside of the workspace. This can be as simple as soft seating located near perimeter windows for individual or team work, a flexible room for both formal and casual meetings, or social collaborative areas for short-duration interactions. Even when work happens within the workstation, a level of privacy is essential to keep people focused.

Each Park by Norm Architects product has a purposeful function, responding to the need for collaboration, privacy, multiple postures, and division of space. Individually or when paired together, Park products are designed to be long-term solutions that can be repositioned and repurposed as a company's needs change over time.
