The Workplace is Changing

Workplaces are responding to major shifts happening in business, technology, demographics, and other far-reaching forces. Factor in the ever-increasing pace of those changes, and the workplace must also be more adaptable over time, even in ways we cannot yet imagine.

That may sound like a tall order, but Allsteel and Gunlocke believe there are ways to make sense of all the noise, and develop comprehensive workplace strategies that successfully address all the things an organization must consider.

We would like to help. This collection of ideas and thought starters is a visual representation of the importance of supporting the work of individuals, teams, and the organization as a whole through a variety of space typologies we refer to as solo, team, and community.

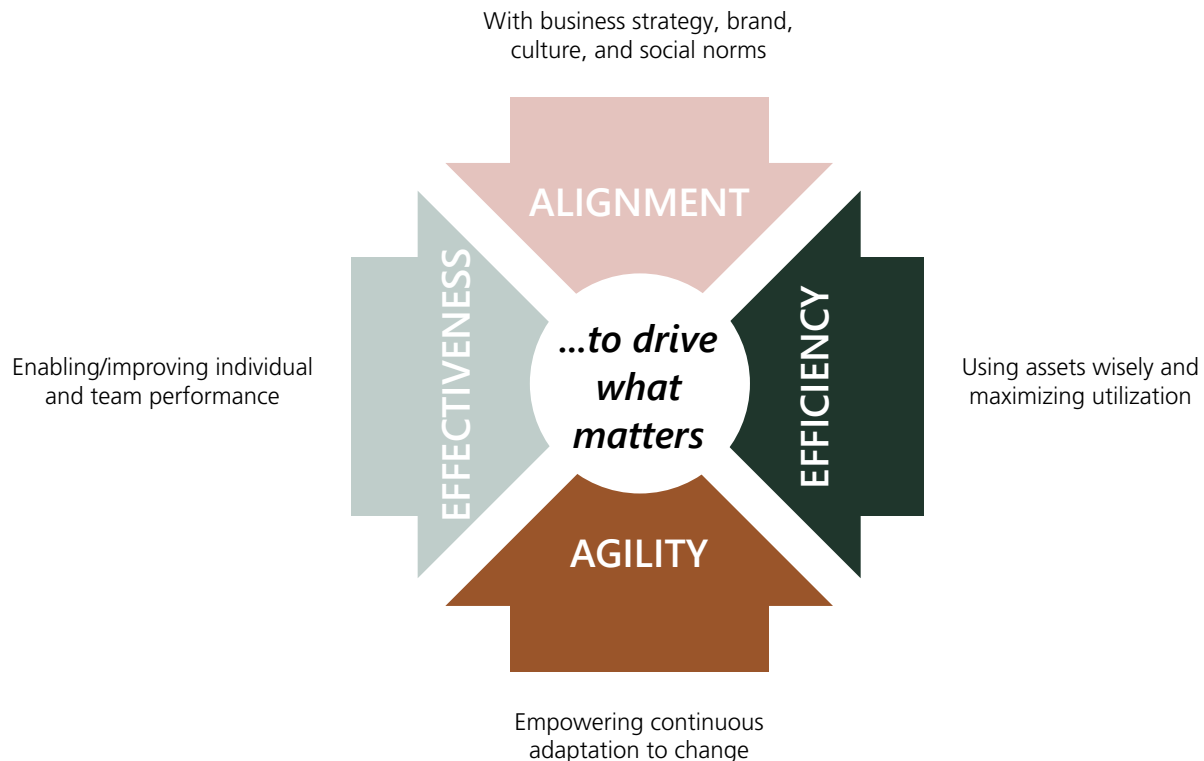

Helping you, your business, and your people become what you believe they are meant to be.

Creating Workplaces That Keep Working

Your workplace strategy is more than just a real estate strategy.

Thoughtfully designed workplaces will support an organization's strategic goals and culture, as well as the highest performance of their workers, all while using assets wisely and enabling future adaptability and flexibility.

Consider these four aspects of a robust, relevant workplace strategy to empower your unique organization, and from there, define the solo, team, and community spaces required to support the organization, people, and work processes.

We believe in the power of solving problems with people, not just for them.

Offices and workstations are getting smaller, and space is being increasingly allocated to team and community spaces to better reflect where work is happening.

Solo Space

Space utilization (getting the most out of every square foot) has become an important organizational focus. We offer an unlimited selection of systems, storage, tables, and seating to address all the ways people need to work in smaller footprints.

Whether you're making the most of your existing workplace or re-planning to better support new ways of working, we have the solution.

Touchdown

With more workers working in a broader variety of spaces, alternative places to work comfortably for short periods of time are essential.

Workstation

Your personal space to call home. Space division, surface, and storage options are purposefully integrated to create the right setting to support the work at hand.

Office

As offices move off the perimeter so more people benefit from natural light, our architectural walls offer glass options to let the light in for office dwellers, too.

Work from home, work from anywhere, or work anywhere within the office.

Understanding what mobility means inside your organization is essential to successfully integrating it into your workplace strategy.

Workplace design should be defined by the people using the space and their work processes.

The workplace is in the midst of a paradigm shift in that the focus is no longer just on the space but more on the people using the space. There is a broader recognition of the positive impact the workplace can have on workers' engagement, health, performance, and, therefore, the overall success of the organization.

Traditional

Solo Space

Phone booths or small individual rooms provide workers with a space for private phone conversations and another option for focused work.

Modern offices are getting smaller. Space is being increasingly allocated to shared zones, while digital files reduce the need for large-scale storage.

Adjacent solo and team spaces allow individuals to come together when needed to collaborate effectively.

Because work has become much more interdependent and collaborative, many new settings support a variety of group work activities, from intense to casual, tech-rich to conversation-rich, ad-hoc to planned, and quick to duration-of-the-project long.

In addition to more traditional conference rooms, workspaces are including multi-purpose spaces designed to accommodate a variety of uses and groups of people. This includes spaces designed for group brainstorming or meetings, dedicated team project rooms, or impromptu huddle spaces strategically placed throughout the floorplan.

We offer inspiring solutions that make collaboration more comfortable and effective, and can help your organization interpret the Allsteel-sponsored Knowledge Worker Team Productivity research.

Lounge

Nearby soft seating promotes comfortable conversations that help build connections or encourage sharing of important insights and project challenges.

Huddle

Collaboration can't always be planned. A variety of purposefully placed settings support quick, impromptu meetings.

Project Room

Dedicated team spaces, like project rooms, not only house work-in-progress and enable effective information sharing, but also promote team identity.

To make these spaces more inviting and functional, a range of seating postures should be provided, along with technology and easy power access.

Multiple Teams, Adjacent Space

Workers are at their desk an average of 35-45% of the time. This suggests that work is no longer happening primarily at the workstation.

The challenge for organizations is to provide environments that support the team space, technology, and work protocols their employees need to collaborate without losing site of the still-very-relevant requirement for spaces that support deep focus.

INTEGRATING WALLS

Three general types of group activities — creation, problem-solving, and knowledge transfer — can require somewhat different types of collaborative spaces. Within the same footprint, these configurations demonstrate the different types of project rooms that can be created. Using Beyond walls and being intentional with furniture selection and technology integration, you can create a space that supports the type of work being done.

Wellness Insight

We often think about standing postures at individual workstations, but having options for standing meetings can also be beneficial (especially for those who spend more time in meetings than at the workstation). Additionally, standing meetings have been shown to be generally shorter and more efficient than meetings at seated height.

Integrated Technology

Team Space

Technology is arguably the most powerful driver for workplace change. But it's not just the technology that's changing — it's the way businesses adapt the technology that is changing as well.

Training spaces are usually highly and easily reconfigurable to accommodate a range of layouts and uses.

Cafés are becoming destination areas that double as all-day meeting spaces.

A space that's the hub of activity has to do a lot of things. Furniture plays an important and integral role, allowing people to come together to share ideas and be productive in many different ways. It can be at a traditional table with chairs, within a more enclosed micro-environment, or more casually with lounge seating that enables multiple user postures. Allsteel products offer effective solutions for all the ways workers might share a meal and ideas.

Welcome

From sophisticated and formal, to fun and colorful, create a look that announces your company culture without saying a word.

Café

A mix of different tables and seating – not to mention the proximity of food and drink – makes the café a great place to meet or socialize throughout the day.

Conferencing

Whether a large meeting is client-facing or internal only, technology, acoustical separation, and other enabling attributes make these spaces important and useful.

Many spaces dedicated to collaborative work are unused because they are in the wrong place or don't support the type of work being done.

Community Space

When organizations move to fewer private offices and more open workspaces, conference rooms take on added importance in the workplace. They need to be designed to serve a multitude of purposes, from formal client presentations or board meetings to casual brainstorming and team meetings.

Successful community spaces provide a centralized open environment to support both small, informal meetings and larger group work sessions.
