I used the Miribel Va-Va Volumizing Hair Foam in my silky, fine curls. The directions state to use two pumps, but I scrunched four to six pumps in my hair. I found that I couldn't overuse the product. It left my hair volumized, soft, hydrated, and feeling clean every time I put it in. I never noticed any buildup. The product does not create any cast for hold, but I enjoyed it so much I purchased the Miribel Silky Smooth Flaxseed Gel to layer over it for hold.

WOULD YOU RECOMMEND?

Yes, I would recommend this product to add volume. With the minimal hold, I think it would work best layered with a gel.

This product gave me great definition and volume. I needed to layer a gel on top to get enough hold to make it to my next wash day. I used more foam than I needed the first time; a little goes a long way, especially if layering with other products. I also used a little foam to touch up on non-wash days and my curls sprang back. I'm not used to a fragrance-free product, so the smell was a bit off-putting the first time I used it, but it doesn't linger in your hair.

WOULD YOU RECOMMEND?

Yes! I think this product is a great layering product and could be a solo styler if you have thinner and finer hair.

Miribel's Va-Va Volumizing Hair Foam gave my thick, medium-length hair more oomph than usual on my wash day. The company says the product will "give your hair life and volume for days," but it is a light-hold hair foam and I didn't find that my curls held as well. This was most likely because I used less products than usual. The foam did a great job to revive my curls on refresh days; I had frizz but my hair was nice and soft. The volume remained, as well. I'm interested to see if the ingredients will help repair and strengthen my hair over time.

WOULD YOU RECOMMEND?

I would recommend this foam to curlies. It might just be my summertime go-to product!
