“The legal industry is strong right now. We were back logged on trials from the pandemic which are all coming in now. Also, with the way things are headed in the state courts, making cases move faster with less continuances, has led to a lot of busy attorneys. The fact that so many people continue to move down here from the northeast has created a growing demand for legal services so I foresee us continuing to be busy.

Firms are coming in from a lot of other places in the country, specifically in the northeast. I have also seen new businesses establishing themselves from commercial to residential and so on. New business brings new potential for litigation and transactional work.

I have had my practice for 22 years before our merger, so I know the industry well. Because we are already entrenched in the community and know the market, it really sets us apart. I am able to help people navigate what is here and create synergies with the new clients from the merger.

I think there will be more consolidation of law firms, and for us specifically, we will be growing in various practice areas. We are vetting candidates and want the people who are at the top of their games.”
