

Why do students cheat

- Students don't want to let their parents down / live up to the parents' expectation / meet their parents' expectation (滿足父母), so they want to get the best possible scores by cheating
- Students want to have a sense of superiority (優越感) by getting a good scores
- Students are overwhelmed by the heavy workload; so in order to have time to revise for quizzes and exams, they have to cheat on their assignments
- Cheating is very convenient as students have all the best AI tools and a wealth of information at their finger tips. students can easily use Google or other social media platforms like Instagram to find the answers

Whittier it's a common problem

- Yes
 - With just a few clicks students', students can immediately get the answers and finish the assignments by using AI tools.
 - The punishment for students who cheat is too lenient / moderate. For example, students who get caught cheating will only be sent to detention class or required to redo the assignments
 - Many students simply plagiarize their peers' work and the teachers seem to turn a blind eye to the situation due to the heavy workload
 - Letting other students copy your work can make you popular or help you become accepted by your peers
 - Teachers are too busy to check and verify students' work
 - teachers sometimes even give out the answer keys and let the students grade their own work
- No
 - Today's schools really focus on cultivating students' moral values

- School would not tolerate students who cheat constantly
- Some schools even have zero tolerance policy for plagiarism
- Cheating will be recorded on the school report
- Repeated offenders can lead to school suspension or expulsion

Ways of dealing with the problem

- The punishment / disciplinary measures should be more stringent. For example, students can be expelled from the school if they cheat. Or, the grade of the student who cheat will be lowered by one letter grade as a punishment
- Teachers should reduce the amount of homework assignments for students so that students can have more time to do revision / finish the assignments
- School should offer after-school tutorial classes for students to study their exam / finish their homework so that they don't cheat.
- Schools can set up AI system to check students' work
