Disposable napkins: These are our materials

Cell tissue:

Cell tissue is the simplest disposable material and is made on the basis of cellulose. It is very supple, tear resistant and low lint. Napkins made of this material are multi-layered and absorbent. Cell tissue can be produced in different grammages to optimize volume and absorbency. VEGA products made of cell tissue are the cellulose napkins.

Airlaid:

Airlaid is a fabric-like disposable material. It is very absorbent and durable in both dry and wet conditions. It is also soft and very pleasant to touch. The synthetic fiber is not biodegradable. VEGA products made of airlaid: Cotto, Arla.

Double-Point:

Double-Point napkins are slightly higher quality than napkins made of cell tissue or recycled paper. This is due to their manufacturing process, in which two layers of paper are glued together with the help of micro-dots. This makes the napkins softer and gives them volume. They feel wonderfully comfortable for your guests. VEGA products made of Double-Point: Rusto, Dubo and Vinitio.

Spunbond fleece:

The disposable Spunbond fleece is more tear-resistant and liquid-resistant than conventional paper. VEGA products made of Spunbond fleece: Spuno.

Spunlace fleece:

This material is the highest quality of our napkin materials and feels like "real" fabric. The disposable non-woven material with a weight of 70 g/m² is made of viscose and cellulose. The material is soft, pleasant to touch and very homogeneous. Both in dry and wet condition, Spunlace is very resistant. The material is biodegradable and compostable. VEGA products made of Spunlace-fleece: Lino, Leina.

Recycled paper: the environmentally friendly alternative

Paper placemat Menuolo p. 109

One way to make disposable products as environmentally friendly as possible is to make them from recycled paper. Our paper table series Recyclo consists of 100% recycled raw materials and is printed with compostable ink. Thus, the paper is fully compostable after its use and has little impact on the environment. Table linen made of recycled paper is particularly suitable when a large number of napkins or placemats are needed quickly, e.g. at trade fairs, festivals or in communal catering. But also snack bars or food trucks like to use this material.
