Historic Washington offers insight into a nineteenth century community and a glimpse at the people and events of the Territorial, Antebellum, Civil War, and Reconstruction eras in Arkansas’s history. The museum village includes historic, public, and private buildings as well as many of Washington’s nineteenth century landscape features—streets bordered with catalpa, magnolia, and other ornamental trees which have shaded the community for 150 years. The historic structures and grounds give a fascinating view of Washington and a taste of the peace and beauty of southwest Arkansas.

Established in 1824, the town of Washington was a convenient stop for travelers on the rugged Southwest Trail leading to Texas. It soon became the economic, political, and cultural center for a large rural population in Hempstead County, Arkansas. The area’s wealth came from cotton and other agricultural products including corn, livestock, and fruit. The townpeople added valuable skills in a number of professions. By 1860, Washington and vicinity had sixteen doctors, fifteen carpenters, nine teachers, nine blacksmiths, three carriage makers, seventeen lawyers, fifteen merchants, six printers, and three hotel keepers. During the Civil War, Washington boomed while serving as the state’s Confederate Capital after Little Rock was taken by the Union Army in 1863.

When the Cairo and Fulton Railroad bypassed the town in 1874, Washington’s heyday was ending. The following year, fire destroyed 43% of the business district. Another fire in 1883 engulfed 24 more businesses, yet the town refused to die. The Washington preservation movement began in 1929 when the Arkansas Legislature approved $5,000 for restoring Arkansas’s Confederate Capitol—then known as the Old State Capitol. This was the first state funds for historic preservation in Arkansas. In 1938, citizens of Washington formed the Pioneer Washington Restoration Foundation to preserve the town’s other historic structures. Old Washington Historic State Park was established in 1973. The Southwest Arkansas Regional Archives, dedicated to collecting and preserving documents and photographs of southwest Arkansas, began in 1978. In 1980, the Ethnic Minority Memorabilia Association was incorporated to preserve and interpret black history. Today, these organizations and the citizens of Washington work together to preserve and interpret the town’s nineteenth century story. In 2006 the park name was changed from Old Washington Historic State Park to Historic Washington State Park.
