Marc Bamuthi Joseph, librettist and spoken word artist

Marc Bamuthi Joseph is a 2017 TED Global Fellow, an inaugural recipient of the Guggenheim Social Practice initiative and an honoree of the United States Artists Rockefeller Fellowship. His opera libretto, We Shall Not Be Moved, was named one of 2017’s “Best Classical Music Performances” by The New York Times. His evening-length work created in collaboration with composer Daniel Bernard Roumain, The Just and The Blind, was commissioned by Carnegie Hall and premiered to a sold out house at Carnegie in March 2019. His upcoming opera Watch Night is inspired by the forgiveness exhibited by the congregation of Emanuel AME Church in Charleston, South Carolina, and will premiere at the Perelman Center in New York in fall 2023.

While engaging in a deeply fulfilling and successful artistic career, he also proudly serves as vice president and artistic director of social impact at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C. He is in high demand for his creative approach to organizational design, brand development and community mediation, and has been enlisted as a strategic partner or consultant for companies ranging from Coca-Cola to Carnegie Hall. His TED Talk on linking sport to freedom design among immigrant youth has been viewed more than a million times, and is a testament to his capacity to distill complex systems into accessible and poetic presentations.

Jonathan Taylor Rush, conductor

Hailed as a continually rising talent in the conducting world, Jonathan Taylor Rush brings passion, unique interpretation and a refreshing energy to the orchestral experience. In fall 2020 he was appointed as assistant conductor of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra. This past fall he was promoted to associate conductor. Previously he served as music director of the Buckeye Philharmonic Orchestra, as well as conducting fellow for the Baltimore Symphony Youth Orchestras. In 2018, he was a Project Inclusion Conducting Fellow with the Chicago Sinfonietta and in 2019 was named assistant conductor. With the Chicago Sinfonietta, Rush worked alongside music professionals and fellow conductors to help redefine classical music, by changing its face and encouraging diversity in orchestras across the U.S. At age 22, as winner of the 2018 Respighi Prize in Conducting, he made his professional orchestra debut with the Chamber Orchestra of New York at Carnegie Hall. He continues to conduct both nationally and internationally, with notable debuts including concerts with the Chicago Symphony, Detroit Symphony, Chicago Sinfonietta, Baltimore Symphony and Nairobi Philharmonic. His debuts in 2023 include this week’s concerts with the Minnesota Orchestra and the premiere of Jeanine Tesori and Tazewell Thompson’s Blue with Washington National Opera. More: jonathanrush.com.

Steven Campbell, tuba

Steven Campbell, the Minnesota Orchestra’s principal tuba since 2005, has performed several times as soloist with the Orchestra, including in the 2018 world premiere of James Stephenson’s low brass concerto Pillars, Ralph Vaughn Williams’ Tuba Concerto in 2015 and Torbjörn Iwan Lundquist’s Landscape in 2011. He has also been featured as soloist several times at Young People's and Family Concerts and performs often with his Orchestra colleagues in the Uptown Brass quintet. A native of Texas, he counts his parents as early musical inspirations. His first teacher was his father, who is also a tuba player. He later studied at the University of Houston with David Kirk and at New England Conservatory with Chester Schmitz. While in Boston, he performed and toured regularly with the Boston Symphony and Pops orchestras. He has been a member of the Milwaukee Symphony, New Mexico Symphony and Orquesta Sinfónica de Galicia in Spain, as well as a frequent guest of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Cleveland Orchestra and Seattle Symphony, among others. He has given master classes and lectures in the U.S. and abroad and is on faculty at the University of Minnesota, where he has frequently performed as soloist with the University Wind Ensemble, most recently in April. Program Notes

May 18, 19, 20

In recent years, Minnesota Orchestra audiences have had many opportunities to become familiar with the works of British composer Samuel Coleridge-Taylor. This season, his music has already been featured three times: at the October 2022 iteration of the Orchestra’s Listening Project concert-and-recording series, which featured his Idyll; this past January, in two performances of his Solemn Prelude just four months after its U.S. premiere; and at a chamber music concert in March that included his Five Fantasy Pieces for String Quartet. The Petite Suite de Concert featured this week is the 12th work by Coleridge-Taylor to be programmed by the Orchestra since 2016.

parallel legacies

The life, career and legacy of Samuel Coleridge-Taylor is similar in its arc to many of the other Black composers who have historically been ignored by many Western institutions, but are being increasingly programmed by the Minnesota Orchestra and other ensembles in recent seasons. Like French composer Joseph Bologne, Chevalier de Saint-Georges—whose two symphonies, as well as a violin concerto, were performed by the Orchestra for the first time in 2021—or William Dawson in the U.S., whose Negro Folk Symphony was heard earlier this year, Coleridge-Taylor achieved a considerable amount of recognition and popularity during his lifetime in his home country and abroad. But once each of these three composers passed away, their works languished and remained unprogrammed by major ensembles for decades because their creators were Black. It is only within the past few years, as many ensembles begin to rectify their role in systemic racism, that a wide audience is again hearing these underappreciated musical gems.

The success of Coleridge-Taylor’s best-known work, a cantata called Hiawatha’s Wedding Feast, led to the composer’s three tours to the U.S. and a personal meeting with President Theodore Roosevelt at the White House in 1904. Despite his publisher, Novello, selling thousands of copies of the work’s score, Coleridge-Taylor remained in a dire financial predicament for most of his life; the rights were purchased outright for 15 shillings with no royalties to be paid to the composer.

advocacy through music

Throughout most of his life, Coleridge-Taylor used his art as advocacy for the advancement of the rights of Africans and African-descended people around the globe. When his 24 Negro Melodies were published in 1905, he wrote: “What Brahms has done for the Hungarian folk-music, Dvořák for the Bohemian, and Grieg for the Norwegian, I have tried to do for Negro melodies.” Many other works also sought to incorporate elements of African music, like his orchestral piece Symphonic Variations on an African Air. Additionally, Coleridge-Taylor was friends with

Coleridge-Taylor: Petite Suite de Concert

Samuel Coleridge-Taylor’s Petite Suite de Concert offers a variety of charming ideas in each of its brief yet affective four movements, showcasing the composer’s immense talents in capturing the romanticism and sentimentality of early 20th-century British musical tastes.

Marsalis: Tuba Concerto

The rarely spotlighted tuba takes center stage in a recent concerto by the eminent composer, jazz trumpeter and bandleader Wynton Marsalis—fusing traditions ranging from classical to bebop to boogaloo. Of note are a passage in which the soloist plays the tuba and sings simultaneously, and a blistering finale that nods to bebop saxophonist Charlie “Bird” Parker.

Simon/Joseph: brea(d)th

In this week’s world premiere of brea(d)th, with music by Carlos Simon and libretto by Marc Bamuthi Joseph—who performs as spoken word artist—the murder of George Floyd is situated in the context of the United States’ centuries-long oppression of Black Americans, asking the audience to consider how we heal and what comes next. Joseph’s libretto, which “considers bread, as in value, breath, as in lifeforce, and breadth, as in the radius of American promise,” is tightly woven with Simon’s music of great emotional range—at turns solemn, bluesy, heart-rending and dissonant, with an instrumental Elegy movement for strings placed at the center.
Influential poet and novelist Laurence Dunbar and set many of Dunbar’s poems to music. In 1900, he was the youngest attendee of the Pan-African Conference in London, where he met influential American writer W.E.B. Du Bois. The two formed a friendship and through Du Bois’ writing, Coleridge-Taylor gained fame in America as a beacon of success in a prominently white field. Before his life was cut short by pneumonia at age 37, he wrote nearly 90 orchestral, chamber and solo works.

A light-hearted affair

The Petite Suite de Concert is charming and entertaining fare, light on the drama and packed with memorable themes reminiscent of Edward Elgar. Written in 1911, the suite is cast in four movements, and a complete performance takes approximately 16 minutes.

La caprice de Nannette. The first movement opens with a curtain-raising theme pronounced by the entire orchestra, punctuated by the percussion. After this opening section gets repeated, primary and secondary themes are presented by the first violins and flutes. Cast in a triple meter, this movement retains a waltz-like feeling throughout. After the briefest of developments, the main themes return before a triumphant close.

de Demande et réponse. Against the gently pulsing syncopations in the lower strings, the first violins present the second movement’s tender melody. The woodwinds then join, with the flutes, piccolo, oboes and clarinets having their turn at the melody with the first violins. A playful call-and-response section comprises the middle of the movement before the return of the opening material. The violins are instructed to play the reprise with mutes, making this delicate material even more ethereal. The melody of this movement proved so popular that it was adapted and published as a song called Question and Answer, with lyrics by Arthur Stanley.

Un sonnet d’amour. The third movement retains the beauty and elegance of the second, featuring fluttering figures which introduce the songful main theme initially presented by the first violins. The movement’s primary key is A major, but the development section shifts to A minor, darkening the mood, but not for long; it lasts only 20 measures before we hear a reprise of the main theme, gorgeously presented by the violas.

La tarantelle frétillante. Roughly translated, the title of the closing movement is “the quivering tarantella.” Historically, tarantellas were dances originating in 15th- to 17th-century Italy meant to be danced by victims of tarantula bites to cure oneself of tarantism. Tarantellas are lively, quick dances set in 6/8 time, and Coleridge-Taylor’s is no different, featuring a flurry of notes and themes that get passed among the orchestra at a fast pace. As in the preceding movements, a short middle section offers contrasting material before the piece races to an exuberant close.

Instrumentation: 2 flutes, piccolo, 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 bassoons, 4 horns, 2 trumpets, 3 trombones, timpani, snare drum, bass drum, cymbals, suspended cymbal, triangle, glockenspiel and strings

Wynton Marsalis
Born: October 18, 1961,
New Orleans, Louisiana
Concerto for Tubist and Orchestra
Premiered: December 9, 2021

Wynton Marsalis is on a bit of a concerto streak: the success of his Violin Concerto, completed in 2015, prompted the Philadelphia Orchestra to commission another for the relatively neglected tuba. Just last month, the Cleveland Orchestra and its Principal Trumpet Michael Sachs premiered a concerto for trumpet, Marsalis’ own instrument as a performer.

The Tuba Concerto was written for the Philadelphia Orchestra’s Principal Tuba Carol Jantsch, who premiered it with that ensemble in December 2021. Like many of Marsalis’ compositions, it is a prism through which the conventions of Western classical music and various Black musical traditions are refracted, reimagined and recombined. Blood on the Fields—Marsalis’ 1997 Pulitzer Prize–winning jazz oratorio—is perhaps the most famous example of his hybrid aesthetic, one that uses the symphony orchestra as the vehicle for the performance and adaptation of jazz and other Black musical idioms. In this respect, Marsalis’ music can be heard as a 21st-century continuation of the musical and political projects begun by such works as Scott Joplin’s opera Treemonisha of 1911, William Grant Still’s Afro-American Symphony of 1931 and Florence Price’s Symphony No. 3, which premiered in 1939.

The Tuba Concerto invites listeners to consider the ways in which the sound of virtuosity of that instrument has changed according to historical and cultural circumstances. Concertos have long served as vehicles through which the soloist could display their technical prowess. Romantic-era composers such as Niccolò Paganini and Franz Liszt helped establish what is now perhaps the most familiar paradigm for virtuoso performance, featuring bravura displays of showmanship through the execution of breathtaking passagework and hair-raising extended techniques. Yet virtuosity has not always been synonymous with musical pyrotechnics; a soloist’s skill can be just as easily showcased in the performance of daringly simple textures and delicate turns of phrase.

Marsalis’ Tuba Concerto combines these different approaches to virtuosity from the European classical tradition with hallmark features of craftsmanship and skill from a range of Black and Latin musical idioms. Within improvisatory genres such as jazz and the blues, soloists often showcase their talents not only through audacious technical feats but also by the deft interpolation of quotations, allusions and paraphrases of other pieces. This concerto offers the soloist numerous opportunities to showcase their mastery of these different kinds of virtuosity. In addition to both lyricism and bravura, the soloist must also perform in a kaleidoscopic array of idioms, ranging from bebop to boogaloo. The concerto thus presents a tour de force that demonstrates the comprehensive musical knowledge of both soloist and composer.

the music: spotlighting many traditions

Up! The first movement comes closest to what one might expect from a contemporary classical concerto. Accompanied by marcato exclamations in the orchestra, the solo line hops about in odd-angled intervals and features three cadenzas requiring the performance of multiphonics, a technique in which the performer plays one pitch while singing a different pitch.

Boogaloo Americana. The title of the second movement clearly signals Marsalis’ hybrid aesthetic. Originating in New York City during the 1960s, boogaloo is a style of dance music that mixes the rhythm and blues rooted in African American tradition with Latin idioms such as mambo and son montuno. Through the use of hand claps and agogo bells, this movement adapts some aspects of boogaloo’s musical language to the symphonic orchestral palette, with occasional pivots to the open-fourth harmonies that characterize the so-called Americana aesthetic popularized by Aaron Copland during the 1940s.

Lament. During the third movement, the tuba is given some of the most melodically arresting material in the entire concerto. After the brooding dissonances of the opening section, the movement presents several dirge-like marches before turning to a “gospel shuffle” in the final section. Notated with instructions such as “shout as if wailing wasn’t enough,” the tuba line carries much of the emotional weight of the movement’s climax.

In Bird’s basement. Replete with blisteringly fast solo lines and raucously unstable harmonic progressions, the final movement, the title of which references the nickname of bebop saxophonist Charlie “Bird” Parker, brings the piece to an energetic close while providing one final opportunity for the soloist to showcase their stylistic versatility.

Instrumentation: solo tuba with orchestra comprising 2 flutes (1 doubling piccolo), 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 bassoons (1 doubling contrabassoon), 4 horns, 2 trumpets, 2 trombones, timpani, snare drum, 3 bass drums, cymbals, hi-hat cymbal, ride cymbal, splash cymbal, suspended cymbal, agogo bells, bongos, cabasa, castanets, cha-cha bell, cowbells, gong, tambourine, tom-toms, triangle, wood block, xylophone, marimba, vibraphone, glockenspiel and strings

Carlos Simon
Born: April 13, 1986, Washington, D.C.

Marc Bamuthi Joseph
Born: November 20, 1975, New York City

brea(d)th
Premiering: May 18, 2023

The summer of 2020 will remain in our region’s cultural memory for decades, even generations, to come. The murder of George Floyd on a south Minneapolis street corner was not a singular incident: Black people have been killed in state-sanctioned violence throughout our country’s history. Floyd’s brutal death ignited protests against police brutality in the Twin Cities and around the world both because it was horrific and because it was captured on film, in widely shared footage taken by witness Darnella Frazier. Carlos Simon and Marc Bamuthi Joseph’s brea(d)th, which receives its world premiere performances this week, situates George Floyd’s story in the context of this country’s centuries-long oppression of Black Americans, and asks us to consider, “what comes next?”

visionary collaborators come to Minnesota

Composer Simon and librettist Joseph regularly explore and illuminate Black American cultural expression through their work. Some of Simon’s recent orchestral pieces include Four Black American Dances (2023), a classical interpretation of dance types common in Black communities; Requiem for the Enslaved (2021), commemorating the 272 people enslaved and sold by Georgetown University, where Simon is now an assistant professor; and Warmth from Other Suns (2020), a string quartet reflecting the stories of Black Americans during the 20th century’s Great Migration from the South to urban centers in the northern and western United States. Joseph’s recent works include The Just and the Blind (2019), which examines fatherhood in a time of mass incarceration; and the libretto to the opera We Shall Not Be Moved (remounted this month at the Pittsburgh Opera), in which five teenagers in current-day Philadelphia are confronted with the 1975 bombing of the MOVE headquarters. Simon and Joseph previously collaborated on Kennedy Center projects it all falls down (2022) and The Road Ahead (2022).

Whether working together or separately, Simon and Joseph are among the most in-demand creators in the classical field in the U.S. today. Simon is the composer in residence for the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., and his newest album, Requiem for the Enslaved, earned him a 2023 Grammy nomination. His music is already familiar to Minnesota Orchestra audiences, with his works An Elegy: A Cry from the Grave—which has been incorporated as the third movement of brea(d)th and Fate Now Conquers receiving performances at Orchestra Hall in recent seasons. In addition to composing concert music for large and small ensembles, he has scored films and toured as a music director and keyboardist. An Atlanta native, he earned degrees from the University of Michigan, Georgia State University and Morehouse College, and has compared his musical work to that of a preacher, stating: “Music is my pulpit. That’s where I preach.” (Joseph’s achievements and background are detailed in a separate profile that precedes this concert’s program notes.)

After the Minnesota Orchestra commissioned Simon and Joseph to create a new piece in the wake of George Floyd’s murder, the composer and librettist visited the Twin Cities twice in 2022 in preparation for writing brea(d)th. The visits were dedicated to learning about the region, meeting local artists and activists, and taking a pilgrimage to George Floyd Square. The visit to the Square was significant to Simon, who said he “wanted to feel the energy in that space, in that particular part of town,” and found that the presence of neighbors sitting on their porches and sharing stories “felt like home.” Conversations with Angela Harrelson, George Floyd’s aunt and a daily presence in the Square, enabled the creative duo to learn more about Floyd as a person and his family’s history. Details gleaned from the visits appear throughout brea(d)th, weaving a powerful connection between the expanse of African American history and the conditions of Floyd’s life and death. An inscription at the top of the score to brea(d)th reads “Commissioned by the Minnesota Orchestra for George Floyd,” but the piece also examines the centuries of what Joseph calls “transgressions against Black dignity” wrought by the United States. Joseph himself, in the role of honored culture-bearer and griot—a West African storyteller-poet-historian—delivers the spoken word component of brea(d)th in these premiere performances.

the artists’ statement

Joseph and Simon provided the following artists’ statement on brea(d)th, written by Joseph.

“Brea(d)th is a classical work, inspired by the enduring presence of George Floyd the Ancestor, asking America to consider an equitable future. We come to the resilient and root-rich Twin Cities as outsiders, but we composed this work from within the walls of Black emotion, curiosity, and dignity. The piece explores a historical timeline that stretches from the pre-colonial to the present condition, and perhaps further, into a post-pandemic America. Who would we be if we used covid-19 as an opportunity to focus on both public health and public healing? Our entire country has endured a trauma...how do we publicly heal?...

“Brea(d)th is a work in five movements, ranging from the Pentecostal to the monastic. I created a libretto that considers bread, as in value, breath, as in lifeforce, and breadth, as in the radius of American promise. Encoded within the work is a reverence for local intelligence, sacrifice, loss, and strength. The Minnesota Orchestra is a citizen institution, and thus the work has an implied and imbued civic import. Truthfully, though, our commitment was to make a work that emanated from and responded to a local experience, while recognizing the hollowing hope that vastly stretches across the body of African America.

“Brea(d)th is a moving, yearning, admonition for repair. It was made by two American sons in honor of George, and in reflection of the fellowship of the gone too soon...”

brea(d)th: a powerful message in words and music prologue

The first movement begins solemnly with triplet gestures and a melody comprised of three ascending, then descending pitches that wend through the orchestra. The choir then enters, putting words to the emerging theme: “Give us this day, our daily bread.” An oscillating tritone motif provides a restless backdrop to Joseph’s text as he guides the listener through reminders of lives lost and the resilience of a people who have endured centuries of oppression. Joseph connects George Floyd’s murder to a broader historical context when he uses “bread” to mean both money and value: he speaks of the “…armed robbery of breath / over some bread and / the wide genocidal breadth of / our country’s racial timeline/ our country’s daily bread…” The movement ends as quietly as it started, the final prayer chanted by the choir, then treble instruments, and at last in the low brass.

breath. Movement two is a meditation on life after death. It opens with the low rumbling of the surdo, a bass drum common in Brazilian samba music, and a bluesy sweep of strings. “Breathe in relief,” Joseph says, “the moon is sweet,” but soon remarks that “the night smells strangely of fruit to me”—a reference to the 1939 song Strange Fruit, written by Abel Meeropol and popularized by Billie Holiday. Melodies for trumpet, trombone and piano float on the breeze as the surdo plays on, illuminating the text that says “Breath is drum.” When the surdo stops playing, Joseph reflects that those we call Ancestors have gained in the afterlife a sense of dignity not afforded them when they lived: “Breath becomes / the way Ancestors pay at the gates / in heaven breath is bread.”

elegy. The last three movements of the piece—Elegy, Bread and Breadth—proceed attacca, one into the next without pause. Elegy is a previously existing piece for strings that Carlos Simon composed in 2015. Subtitled A Cry from the Grave, the song of lamentation is dedicated “to those who have been murdered wrongfully by an oppressive power; namely Trayvon Martin, Eric Garner and Michael Brown.” Elegy features melodic fragments that travel between sections, dramatic changes in texture and volume, and heart-rending soli for viola and cello. The piece ends on a major chord—unexpectedly clear harmony in comparison to anything before or after it. The Minnesota Orchestra performed this piece in a broadcast and livestreamed performance on May 28, 2021, just over one year after the murder of George Floyd.

bread. Bread—the most programmatic of the movements—includes details specific to the Twin Cities. In addition to acknowledging land stolen from Indigenous people, Joseph references the intersection of 38th Street and Chicago Avenue (now known as George Floyd Square); the historic 24 Demands for Justice drawn up by Minneapolis residents; and biographical details about George Floyd’s life, including that he had 13 siblings and loved to make music in church. At the mention of a “counterfeit bill”—relating both to the broken treaties between Native communities and colonizers, as well as the $20 bill George Floyd had on the day he was murdered—an eruption of pitches based on the interval of an open fifth with added dissonance breaks the reflective atmosphere. A cello solo undergirds Joseph’s question, “If not justice for all America / then how do you choose? / Who wins America? / Does somebody invariably lose?” Increasingly disjunct intervals paint an auditory response to this rhetorical question, before returning to more reflective and sustained harmonies. The movement ends with the chorus’ prayer of conscience: “May we feast on the bread that brought us one more day to get it right.”

breath. The fifth and final movement begins with a percussive building of tension releasing into a theme that moves through the ensemble in an insistent, fugue-like manner. “So much work has been done,” cries the chorus, “Who does the work that’s still left?” The first iteration of a representative governing body in the colonies that would later become the United States met in Jamestown, Virginia, in 1619. There was no mention during the six-day long assembly of the practice of enslavement, though the capture, enslaving and trading of Africans was underway in the Americas by then. A huge breadth of history—244 years—passed before the Emancipation Proclamation ordered the end of enslavement, and another five years went by before the ratification of the 14th Amendment in 1868 granted some African Americans—the vast majority descendants of slavery—legal voting rights. Joseph revisits that figure of 244 years, reminding us that it will be the second decade of the 22nd century, 244 years after 1868, “by the time there is a parity of Black enslavement and Black political agency,” and at that point, “NO one in this room will be alive.” The strings and winds pulse the passage of time before the fugue theme returns and the chorus asks repeatedly, “Who does the work that’s still left?”

The movement ends as it began: with a pedal point in low strings illustrating, perhaps, the expansive weight and breadth of the labor necessary for equity, and an inexorable building of tension that signifies—what? A horrific injustice? A roar of questions? An uprising of emotion? A defiant challenge? Simon has left it to the individual listener to choose.

Instrumentation: spoken word narrator and SATB mixed chorus with orchestra comprising 2 flutes, piccolo, 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 bassoons, 4 horns, 3 trumpets, 3 trombones, tuba, timpani, snare drum, bass drum, ride cymbal, suspended cymbal, bell tree, crotales, surdo, tam-tam, vibraphone, chimes and strings

Program note by Shekela Wanyama. Wanyama, along with Kathy Saltzman Romey, prepared the choirs for this week’s performances of bread(d)th and sings in the soprano section.

Assume the posture of casual
A genuflection while levitating
Buoyed by the neck of a man you
Are actively robbing of air
Armed robbery of breath Over some bread and
The wide genocidal breadth of Our country's racial timeline
Our country's daily bread
Our injurious history written in Lightning
The animating factors that authorize violence
Give us this day
A shot at peace
A day when you don't have to Function knowing the night
Before a young woman was state
Sanctioned murdered in her sleep
Lord
The breadth of the task
Give us this day...one more Breath...
Lord solemnly hear the underlying desperation of the ask
Give us this day
Our bread
Enough to feed our ancestors when We pay them respect
Give us this day
The breadth of our American stake
Restore the debt of stolen breath...

CHORUS
Give us this day our daily bread

II. BREATH

NARRATOR
A soul to keep
Breathe in relief
The night is fruit
The moon is sweet
Take a piece
Swallow the satellite
Beyond your reach
The night is dream
But I'm not asleep
Not woke
Just awake
I breathe in what I see
I breathe in the night
It smells strangely of fruit to me
Breathe in the chemical shift
When I walk by the police
The smell of all the probabilities
Played out on all of the screens
Breathe in the scenes
Breathe in the night and imagine
The time you felt most free...
When
In your life
Have you felt most free?...
I sing America's longest notes
I sometimes forget to breathe
When I do
My cultural differences haven't been tucked into the skirts of the queen
I am free to access an Infrastructure of hope
Breathe in the night
The moon is ripe with juice
It smells like autonomy Smells like fruit beginning to Bruise and rot
Breathe in
It's a lot
Breathe out
Let it go
Imagining yourself living
Knowing you only have one breath
Left before your soul let's go
Breathe in mortality
It is an inevitability
And as such
Shouldn't one's last breath be Made with dignity
Breathe in the idea
That death is a lie
That energy, not a human shell is
The actual tell of a life
Life is death
As a vision
As a lived permission
Inception of an intuition of what to Cosmically expect
Life is a just a set of lips to whisper
Born to kiss our names back to the Wind so our spirit might hear it
And vibrate
A mitzvah
Incarnate

NARRATOR
And back again
Reciprocal energy
Spirit and flesh
These words rolling off my tongue
The first breath of afterdeath in
My lungs
After life I just go back to where I
Came from
Breath is drum
Breathe in Light and smoke
Breath is drum
Breathe in the midnight sun where
Life never sets
Breath is drum
Ancestors know no death
Breath becomes
The way Ancestors pay at the gates
In heaven breath is bread
The first breath of afterdeath in
My lungs
After life I just go back to where I
Came from
Breath is drum
Breathe in Light and smoke
Breath is drum
Breathe in the midnight sun where
Life never sets
Breath is drum
Ancestors know no death
Breath becomes
The way Ancestors pay at the gates
In heaven breath is bread

IV. BREAD

CHORUS
What does the night say to you
Before you lay your head down
Does the night confide it's proudest
Truth
Before the night falls does the
Pride fall too
Or does the pride of the night rise
Like a hand in salute
What does the night say to you
Before you lay your head down
Does the night confide it's proudest
Truth
Before the night falls does the
Pride fall too
Or does the pride of the night rise
Like a hand in salute

Before it was a corner
It was a boundless plain that never Considered the square edges of Man's myopia
Over time
The edges encroached
And brought with them
Paper and value
Before it was a constitution
It was a hand written note
Presented to a native woman
As legal tender
she held it to the light
Squinted twice
And laughed at the myopic man who tried to pass a counterfeit bill before the sun rose that day the corner knew…

pride comes before the fall
American avarice too
American pride consumes
Like a starving cub hungry for food
If not Justice for all America
Then how do you choose
Who wins America
Does somebody invariably lose
Before the sun rose that day
The corner already knew

The corner had seen it before
The block knows before the news
The block knows who America is likely to choose
Before the sun rises
The night tells America’s truth

What does the night say to you
Before you lay your head down
Does the night confide it’s prideful truth
Before the night falls does the pride fall too
Or does the pride of the night rise like a hand in salute

What does the night say to you
Before you lay your head down
Does the night confide it’s prideful truth
Before the night falls does the pride fall too
Or does the pride of the night rise like a hand in salute
Before the sun rose that day
The corner already knew
Before the sun rose that day
The corner already knew
Before there was a cost
There was bread
Before there was socially determined health
We collectively cared for the sick and honored the dead
Before there was qualified immunity
The laws and loyalty to community provided enough force to protect the peace

Before the man
Was taken for some bread
He had access to memory
Of sharecropping in North Carolina
Of making music in church
Of 15 sisters and brothers
Of challenges with sobriety
Of a life before the fall
Before the fall
There was bread
Before the sun rose that day
The corner was already cursed and blessed
Weight of the body
Wait for true equity
Waverering feet
Equally bruised legs
Of course there is before
Much has happened to us
But we, the people are more than ill will be done
Our kingdom once was and shall come
Give us this day
Our bread
Before the fall
Came a duty to keep our ancestors fed
What is the equity owed to the people before American bread
The people for whom the parchment of American purchase is counterfeit God bless American bread and the hands that have prepared it...
May the bounty be baked into the hands that have prepared it...
Seasoned by 2,000 seasons
True to our native land
Before the sun rise tomorrow
May we feast on the bread that bought us one more day to try to get it right...

CHORUS
May we feast on the bread
That bought us one more day
To try to get it right...
May we feast on the bread
That bought us one more day
To try to get it right...
May we feast on the bread
That bought us one more day
To try to get it right...

V. BREADTH

CHORUS
So much work has been done
Who does the work that’s still left?

The breadth of the task…

In 1619, Jamestown, enslaved a color-based American caste
It took 244 years before Black people were enslaved a voting place in the franchise 1868 the 14th amendment was ratified
Jamestown-citizenship
244 years in between 244 years from 1868 will be the second decade of the NEXT century
By the time there is a parity of Black enslavement and Black political agency, NO one in this room will be alive.
And THAT is the breadth of the task
To create the EQUAL positive effect Of THAT historical debt The debt of 12 generations of humans who were not permitted to be who they could have been THAT is the breadth of the sin
Caste is the infrastructure of our divisions
It is our country’s pre-existing condition
If a person has high blood pressure, it’s not a surprise if they suffer a heart attack
Why are WE surprised by the way law enforcement disregards the dignity of Blacks
The breadth of the task Is to make a future that remembers the breadth of the stolen
To think of joy as an economy
Is to make a future that remembers
Consider the breadth of a nan at the very end of a life
He breaks no law that requires the death penalty
But that is what he receives
Consider at the time of his death
There is a viral disease
That literally sees no color
Sees us for what we actually are
As the same
As an interconnected species
It took a blind organism to make the planet stop
And notice
The breadth
And depth
And late spring carelessness by which American law
Presides over black death
The breadth of a life
The breadth of the lives of folks on the block who didn’t have activist intentions
And the breadth of the local activists who supported them with intention

The breadth of our intention to learn the cost of the debt our intention to earn back what was lost with his breath
the breadth of the people who ain’t out here for bread who are healing the city who the city often forgets
The breadth of our intention to learn the cost of the debt our intention to earn back what was lost with his breath
the breadth of the people who ain’t out here for bread who are healing the city who the city often neglects

CHORUS
So much work has been done
Who does the work that’s still left?

Do you remember 2020?
Do you remember its breadth
Standing on the steps of the Supreme Court after Justice Ginsburg passed, or standing in Black Lives Matter Plaza, near the white house, days after protesters were tear-gassed
Do you remember 2020?
Do you remember its breadth
I found myself transported to the root of the American experiment.
Beyond anger, or grief, what led so many of us to gather in those moments?
What are the ties that bind us together?
The breadth of common hope that we could be “better” than this... that with clear eyed understanding of our social pathologies, there existed a pervasive doe eyed idealism underneath.
There was a ‘reason’ why we demanded better of our country... because we collectively knew we were ‘capable’ of better...that like a teacher’s most gifted student after failing several critical tests, we collectively knew that could be more accurately defined by our promise than by our failures.
The promise of what’s possible
That’s the breadth of the task
To make possible
The breadth of the promise...

CHORUS
So much work has been done
Who does the work that’s still left?
