Study finds aloe gel improves skin health

A 2009 study found taking aloe orally reduces facial wrinkles. In the study, 30 women over the age of 45 took aloe vera as a daily supplement. One group took a low dose (1,200 mg/day) and a second group took a high dose (3,600 mg/day).

The researchers measured signs of skin aging at the beginning and end of the study. After just 90 days, the researchers found that facial wrinkles improved significantly in both groups. But interestingly in the lower dose group skin elasticity also improved.

The researchers found that the aloe increased collagen production leading to better structural support of the skin and fewer wrinkles. They also found aloe decreased gene activity that causes collagen to become damaged. The researchers concluded: "Aloe gel significantly improves wrinkles and elasticity in photoaged human skin, with an increase in collagen production in the photoprotected skin and a decrease in the collagen-degrading..."
